OBSTRUCTION CHARGES LAID

Police Grab 32 Pickets In Dawn Raid at Kitimat

KITIMAT (CP) — Thirty-two men, including Peter Burton, local president of the Canadian Association of Smelter and Allied Workers, were charged today with obstruction after about 100 RCMP forcibly removed the union's picket line at the Aluminum Company of Canada's smelter operation.

The police, complete with riot gear and dogs, moved in at 5:45 a.m. when the picket line was down to a minimum number of men and took them to Terrace in a bus.

The arrests were peaceful and without incident.

Police took the places of the union members and were not letting anyone in or out of the smelter plant.

The pickets were charged with obstructing, interrupting or interfering with the lawful use, enjoyment or operation of property.

In Victoria, RCMP Chief Superintendent Marvin Marcus said some members of the force have been alerted to be transferred to Kitimat should the situation warrant it.

In a separate development, delegates at the NDP convention in Penticton voted today to demand that 'the immediate injustices suffered by Alcan employees and other groups of workers at the hands of the Anti-Inflation Board be rectified.''

The delegates also voted to take up a collection for the legal defence of the arrested workers.

Former NDP labor minister Bill King said he regrets the Alcan dispute resulted in arrests. He said however, that when tempers have cooled the workers will realize defiance of the law isn't going to help their cause.

The strikers appeared to be strengthening their picket lines late Friday, blocking the highway leading to the Anderson Creek bridge with rows of cars.

Union local president Peter Burton was calling on members to refrain from violence and if arrested to go quietly. He also asked that all children at the site be taken back to the town, seven miles away.

The ranks of workers and supervisory staff, who continue to operate the smelter, were thinned by about 60 persons Friday night when the union refused to allow employees back into the plant after they crossed picket lines to attend a funeral.

About 740 Alcan employees, most of them supervisory staff, were believed still inside the plant today.

Three busloads were allowed to leave the plant and cross picket lines at about 10 a.m. Friday to attend the funeral of Kevin Rooney, 35, an employee who died earlier this week inside the smelter from a suspected heart attack.

The agreement with pickets stipulated that the employees would recross the picket line at 4:30 p.m.

A selection of letters will be published on June 26, the Saturday before Dominion Day.

Jets Cross Border

Rhodesian air force jet fighters flew across the Mozambique border on Thursday to destroy mortar positions and an ammunition dump, according to The Herald.

The newspaper quotes Rhodesian residents near the border as saying the air strike followed a three-hour rocket and mortar attack on a Rhodesian tea plantation by forces of the Felimo party in Mozambique.

But it said only that the Rhodesian forces took "appropriate retaliatory action." It gave no details of the action nor said who was responsible for the firing from Mozambique.

The official communique said 11 nationalist guerrillas have been killed since Thursday.

Price Rise Slowing —AIB

OTTAWA (CP) — The anti-inflation board said Friday the rate of increase in food prices has slowed since the period measured by Statistics Canada, which reported Thursday that food prices in May had jumped 1.5 per cent from the previous month.

W. W. Lasby, the head of the board's food price monitoring division, released a statement saying the board's predictions in late April about expected food price increases may have been somewhat high.

Statistics Canada reported that the food price increase in May—primarily a one-month jump of 12.4 per cent in beef prices—was the major factor in pushing the consumer price index up by nine-tenths of one per cent, the sharpest jump in six months.

Since May 7, the board survey showed that the beef prices for example had increased by only one-tenth of one per cent and were running about three per cent below the level a year ago.

Welfare Loss Fear Her Road to Death?

By PAUL NICHOLSON
Times Staff

A 58-year-old Victoria woman who died this week may have taken her own life because of constant worry that she was about to be cut off her welfare incentive program.

Mrs. Honor Eastman died Thursday two hours after she was hit by a car in the 3200-Block Cedar Hill Road — about two blocks from her home at 3020 Cedar Hill.

A number of workers at the Victoria Community Action Advocacy who worked with Mrs. Eastman feel certain her death was the result of her increasing fear of money problems related to the welfare program — and they have a fair bit of circumstantial evidence to back up their beliefs.

Saanich police said driver David Henry Paterson of 1667 Freeman told them she seemed to move quickly into the path of his car at 7:49 p.m.

About 10 minutes earlier, further south on Cedar Hill in Victoria, there was another incident involving Mrs. Eastman and another car.

She was either brushed by the car or fell down as it passed.

The driver stopped and offered assistance, but she said she was all right and continued walking north to where she died moments later.

Mrs. Eastman was on welfare receiving $160 a month. Through the incentive program where she spent 40 hours a month working at the community action advocacy, she earned another $100 per month.

Last August incentive program rules changed to allow persons community service work for only six months.

Early this year, Mrs. Eastman received a six-month extension but as time began to run out she became increasingly worried and depressed, says Susan Talbot, co-ordinator of projects for the community group and a close friend of Mrs. Eastman's.

"She was under a constant worry that the extra $100 could be cut off at any time," Talbot said in an interview Friday.

Mrs. Eastman had recently been treated for stress at the Eric Martin Institute "because of the terrible fears descending on her," Talbot said.

She said the woman's husband is receiving a disability pension and cannot work at a regular job. The additional $100 a month was important to them.

About a month ago, Talbot said, Mrs. Eastman came to her and said: "Susan, I want you to have my daughter's address and phone number in case something should happen to me. I know you'll make sure something's done."

Talbot said she said to her not to be silly, but Mrs. Eastman replied, "You never know."

About three weeks ago Mrs. Eastman visited her daughter in Calgary for two weeks and then a week ago she had her will drawn up through the community service offices.

The night Mrs. Eastman went on her fatal walk she left lying on a table some forms that had to be filled out regarding the annual application for welfare for the handicapped.

Talbot said the woman had told her she had been afraid to fill out the forms—saying she was terrified she and her husband wouldn't qualify.

"Many others are living under fear and intimidation imposed on them by government regulations," Talbot said.

"Do we have to have a death to bring it to a head? Can't we educate the government before tragedy happens?" she asked angrily.

"These people are literally dying day by day. Honor (Eastman) started dying months ago."

Talbot feels there should be no time limit on the incentive programs.

Every six months there should be an evaluation of the inceptive worker by the employer and social worker, but there should be provision for continuation if all agree it is necessary, she said.

That would get people out from under the terrible fear that the end of the incentive money is coming.

"It's easy for the government to take it away, but they don't offer any alternative," she said.

An inquest into the death has not been called, but city coroner Edmond Jorre de St. Jorre is conducting an inquiry.

High-Sounding Phrases, Sour Notes, End Habitat

VANCOUVER (CP) — The United Nations Habitat conference ended Friday with high-sounding phrases about the value of international co-operation.

But, there also were bitter expressions of regret that political disagreements had divided the two-week international conference on human settlements in its final hours.

The Vancouver Declaration of Human Settlements, 1976, was prepared by a group of Third World nations earlier in the week. It had been the subject of frantic negotiations during the last five days as delegates tried to reach compromise wording on 13 of its 62 clauses.

Most offensive to the western bloc that opposed it were references to a resolution passed by the UN General Assembly last November equating Zionism with racism and a number of clauses demanding more control of resources for developing nations.

In the end, no compromise wording was reached despite meetings that often ran into the early hours of the mornng.

The vote was 89-15 at the main plenary session in favor of the resolution with 10 abstentions. The Latin American, African, Asian, Arab and communist nations combined against Canada, the United States, Israel and the western European nations.

BOY, 7, CHARGED

EDMONTON (CP) — Police said today a seven-year-old boy has been charged in the death of Christopher Templar, 2½, whose body was found in a pond at the bottom of a ravine near his home.

Staff Insp. W. H. Stewart of the criminal investigation division told a news conference the charge against the boy, whose name was not released, was laid late Friday after the body of the Templar child was found.

The child, who disappeared Thursday evening, had been the object of a 25-hour search in the northeast area of the city which involved more than 140 volunteers and police, a Canadian Forces helicopter and tracking dogs.

Insp. Stewart said the same boy, charged with murder punishable by life imprisonment, had been involved in a recent incident in which a three-year-old boy had been beaten and pushed down the same ravine.

Cardiac Patients Safer at Home—Report

By STUART AUERBACH
Washington Post

BOSTON — Flying in the face of the usual medical practice in North America, a British study has found that more patients survive heart attacks if they are treated at home than if they are hospitalized.

The study, published in a recent issue of the British Medical Journal, concluded that the stress of the specialized cardiac care units — where patients are hooked up to sophisticated monitors that keep constant check on heart actions — might further weaken the heart and be responsible for the extra deaths.

The British findings have sparked a controversy among experts in the U.S., where most heart attack patients routinely are sent to cardiac care units.

"To send a patient home here would almost be grounds for a malpractice suit," said Dr. Raymond Neutra, a Harvard medical school specialist who conducted a seminar here on the study this week.

The controversy arises at a time of increased concern, recently expressed in Ivan Illich's book "The Medical Nemesis," that the U.S. is becoming an over-medicated society.

During a visit to Washington last week, Illich, a social philosopher, met officials of the department of health, education and welfare to expound his view that some of the techniques of modern medicine may be doing more harm than good.

The British study, headed by Dr. H. G. Mather of Southhead hospital in Bristol, would seem to back that view.

The doctor there compared 450 men at four medical centres. Matched according to age and severity of heart attacks, half were admitted to hospital coronary care units, the other half treated at home.

At the end of 330 days — almost a year — the death rates were 20 per cent among the patients treated at home, 27 per cent among the patients who had been hospitalized.

(Patients judged on first examination to have suffered an extremely severe attack and hospitalized were excluded from the study.)

Older patients, those over 60, did far better at home than in the hospital — a surprising finding since they

PRAYERS FAIL DIABETIC

DAWSON CREEK (CP) — An inquest has been called June 26 into the death of a known diabetic, Patty Ann Sargeant, 19, who during a testimonial service at the Parkhill United Pentecostal Church June 1 said she felt the Lord had healed her — then stopped her daily insulin injections.

Mrs. Sargeant, a resident of Dawson Creek for the last year, was dead when taken to Dawson Creek and District Hospital at 12:25 a.m. Sunday.

J. W. Brand, pastor at the church and a long-time friend of Mrs. Sargeant, was called by Mrs. Sargeant's sister early Saturday morning and told she was not feeling well.

The congregation, on the way to a scheduled Saturday evening prayer meeting, went to the pastor's house where Mrs. Sargeant was.

Brand said the congregation knelt down to pray when Mrs. Sargeant died.

He said Mrs. Sargeant came back to life twice after he prayed at her side for a span of several seconds.

Syria Agrees To Pullout

Times News Services

Syria agreed today to lift its siege of Beirut and pull its troops out of Lebanon, a Palestine guerrilla communique said.

Libya's premier said Libyan troops have entered the embattled Lebanese capital as the first unit of a Pan-Arab peace-keeping force.

The Palestinian statement, reported in Cairo, came from Fatah, the largest guerrilla group led by Yasir Arafat. It said the withdrawal of the 12,500 Syrian troops in Lebanon will be accomplished in two stages within 10 days of the agreement's implementation.

The statement, carried by Egypt's Middle East News Agency, did not say when the accord will go into effect but it said a ceasefire was also arranged.

The statement said the Sidon-Arboun road will be opened to food caravans. Syrian forces cutting off Beirut have confiscated all food and fuel supplies to the capital.

The accord was reached between Salah Khalaf for the Palestinian-leftist Moslem alliance in Lebanon, and Maj. Gen. Nagui Gamie, Syrian deputy defence minister, the statements said.

News of the accord was released in Cairo, but the talks apparently took place in Damascuus.

Libya's Premier Abdul Salam Jalloud said the Libyan troops were trying to separate fighting Syrian and Palestinian forces.

'No-Fault' Divorce Planned

TORONTO (CP) — The federal cabinet plans to introduce "no-fault divorce," in which marriage breakdown will become the sole grounds, according to The Globe and Mail.

In a front-page story from Ottawa by reporter William Johnson, the newspaper says the cabinet has approve the measure and described it to the Liberal caucus Wednesday of this week. It adds that Justice Minister Ron Basford will outline it at a federal-provincial conference in Vancouver next week.

"But the timing of the legislation to implement the still-secret proposals has not been decided," the story says. "Some people in the cabinet and caucus fear a backlash against the divorce reform and want it put off until the public has simmered down over two current reforms before Parliament—the abolition of capital punishment and the licensing of guns."

Cabinet sources in Ottawa were not immediately available for comment. Basford was in Vancouver Friday night attending the Habitat conference.

Barrett's Still In Driver's Seat

Barrett, nominated by Karen Sanford, NDP MLA for Comox, was to address delegates at the party's 16th annual convention later today.

Harold Steeves, former NDP MLA for Richmond, was nominated to challenge incumbent party president Yvonne Cocke in elections to take place later today.

More than 700 cheering, hand-clapping, table-pounding delegates welcomed Barrett and national NDP leader Ed Broadbent to the convention's official opening session.

Barrett threatened to upstage Broadbent's key-note address when the delegates twice rose to give him standing ovations for his introduction of the national party chief.

Broadbent stuck close to his theme of economic incompetence in Prime Minister Trudeau's federal government, but widened his attack to include Opposition leader Joe Clark.

"He doesn't just go back into the 19th century," Broadbent said of Clark's economic thinking. "He goes back to Adam Smith in the 18th century."

The delegates were in a receptive mood after hearing a report from party president Vyonne Cocke that membership rolls had swelled to the 25,000 mark, an increase of about 10,000 from this time last year.

"This makes the B.C. NDP the biggest in Canada, outstripping Saskatchewan and Ontario," the wife of former NDP health minister Dennis Cocke told the crowd.

The increased membership has also opened up delegate eligibility quotas and more than 800 delegates had registered by 7 p.m. Friday, with more to arrive today and Sunday. Making this convention the largest in the B.C. party's history.

Mrs. Cocke told the delegates that Bob Williams,

$10 Billion at Stake as Ottawa, Provinces Meet

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Prime Minister Trudeau and provincial premiers assenble here Monday for a conference which, according to some observers, could begin a fundamental reshaping of some of the structures of confederation.

At stake will be the getting and spending of some $10 billion, the amount that the federal government now transfers to provinces under various shared-cost programs and revenue equalization arrangements.

Also to be discussed is the question of patriating the constitution from the British Parliament where it now rests as the British North America Act.

First item on the agenda for the two-day conference, which will be closed to the public and press, is "shared-cost programs."

Such programs, including hospitalization, medicare and the Canada Assistance Plan, are costing the federal government some $5 billion this year.

Also on the agenda is the question of equalization payments whereby revenues from richer provinces go to the less wealthy.

Cost of equalization payments, revenue guarantees and various other measures will amount to some $4.5 billion this year.

An indication of a possible row was contained Friday in Finance Minister Donald Macdonald's statement that the federal government wants to reduce its payments for social welfare programs and turn over more responsibility to the provinces.

Speaking to reporters who asked if that meant Ottawa intends to pay less for the programs, Macdonald replied:

"If you're talking in dollars and cents terms, in the very broadest sense, the answer would be yes."

Ottawa wants to change the formulas for its financial contributions to major social programs of hospital insurance and medical care and may propose a cut in its 50-per-cent share of post-secondary education costs.

The federal proposals are to be presented by Prime Minister Trudeau as the meeting opens.

"The prime minister's paper will deal with principles," a federal official who helped prepare it says.

Provincial government officials were given the federal proposals here Tuesday. The premiers meet Sunday to firm up their positions before entering the talks.

Because provinces have had limited time to study the federal proposals and to figure out whether they gain or lose, it is doubtful that first ministers will arrive at any firm agreements at the conference.

It is expected another one will have to be held in the autumn.

It is also doubtful that Prime Minister Trudeau will achieve unanimity among the premiers on the question of patriating the constitution.

Several provinces have objected to the idea of having the federal government act unilaterally in bringing the constitution to Canada, at least until there is agreement on an amending formula.

GOV'T JOBS SOUGHT

VANCOUVER (CP) — A construction industry advisory board report asks the British Columbia government to help create jobs for unemployed workers in the industry at a time when the private sector has cut back on projects.

The six-page brief presented Friday to Premier Bill Bennett, Finance Minister Evan Wolfe and Highways and Public Works Minister Alex Fraser urges the government to give the industry new work by tendering any department projects already drawn up.

The brief warned that unemployment among construction workers could reach crisis proportions soon unless more work is made available.

The board represents both unions and employers in the industry. There are about 70,000 construction workers employed by 2,000 employers in the province.

Board members told a news conference that the industry's expectation that about two million square feet of public works construction, planned for 1976, has fallen flat because the plans have been shelved.

The board said unemployment already is reaching 30 per cent among the basic trades, like teamsters and laborers.

John Donaldson of Teamsters' Local 213 said the only major public works under way now are construction projects at three dam sites for B.C. Hydro, work that requires a work force of just 600.

Board members said the provincial government's cutback in public works construction comes at a time when the private sector has also pulled back.

Rebellious Union Fined

VANCOUVER (CP) — Local 1 of the Upholsterers International Union was fined $1,000 and eight of its members were fined a total of $1,700 Friday for contempt of court in disobeying a British Columbia Supreme Court injunction.

Mr. Justice Lloyd McKenzie warned the union and its members that any further acts of contempt of the injunction prohibiting unlawful obstruction of the Skyway Luggage Company's plant could result in jail terms.

He said a total ban on picket action at the plant also could be considered if futre infractions occur.

The union has been legally on-strike at the plant since April 6 and was called to court by the firm after pickets continued to interfere with lawful access to the plant despite the injunction.

The injunction had been aprpoved by the union.

Mr. Justice McKenzie was told that Skyway obtained the injunction April 22 that the union and pickets were served with the injunction, but that the pickets continued to block and interfere with the access.

Air Strike Threat

OTTAWA (UPI) — There could be a nation-wide strike of air traffic controllers if a suitable replacement to head a commission into bilingual air traffic control is not found next week, the head of the controllers' association said today.

J. M. Livingston, president of the Canadian Air Traffic Control Association, said CATCA would give the government one week to find "an acceptable" replacement for John Keenan, who resigned last week.

He said the country might be subject to a nation-wide strike if a replacement for Keenan could not be found.

Keenan, a Montreal lawyer, resigned as commissioner in the touchy bilingualism dispute last week in the face of pressure from the Quebec airmen's association who claimed he had a conflict of interest in the matter. Keenan previously had been a lawyer for the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association.

Livingston said CATCA's 2,200 members would vote Monday "On the question of the resignation of Mr. Keenan."

In an interview, Livngston stated his members were prepared to participate in a study of bilingualism in air traffic control in Quebec.

He added he had submitted the name of a person to replace Keenan but would not reveal who.

The matter of the use of both French and English in air conrol over Quebec has been contentious since Prime Minister Trudeau's government said it would push for bilingualism.

Livingston said "we're not opposed to bilingual air traffic control until the point where bilingual air traffic control in our opinion begins to infringe upon aviation safety."

TURIN BANDITS LEAVE PUNCHLINE

TUPIN, Italy (UPI) — Three bandits robbed a post office of about $1,800 Friday and locked 10 customers and workers inside.

Before fleeing in an automobile, police said the robbers lowered the gate over the entrance and posted this sign:

"Closed Because of Robbery."

Cubans Still In Angola?

Washington Post

MEXICO CITY — U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger said Friday that there is no "conclusive confirmatin" that Cuba is withdrawing its troops from Angola.

Kissinger announced last month that Cuban Prime Minister Fidel Castro had told Swedish leader Olof Palme that Cuban troops were being gradually pulled out of Angola. Last weekend Castro himself announced that the troops were being gradually withdrawn.

At a news conference here Friday, Kissinger said there was as yet no confirmation of a Cuban denial, "especially a confirmation whether there is a net return" of Cuban troops "or whether there is a rotation."

"So at this point," he concluded, "it would be premature for us to draw any conclusions."

(In Brussels, U.S. Defence Secretary Donald Rumsfeld said at a news conference that he had "no evidence" that a Cuban withdrawal had begun. Told that Castro had greeted returning Cubans in Havana, Rumsfeld said they may have been "rotated back" and replaced by fresh troops.

(The Yugoslav news agency Tanjug reported Friday from Luanda, the capital of Angola, that another unit of Cuban soldiers had left for Havana under a continuing withdrawal.

Washington estimates that between 12,000 and 15,000 Cuban troops were sent to Angola where they helped the Soviet-backed Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola to overwhelm two pro-Western groups in a civil war.

When Kissinger learned of Castro's letter to Palme, during a visit to Sweden last month, a high U.S. official in the Kissinger party said the Central Intelligence Agency had been ordered to monitor the Cuban withdrawal from Angola.

were not expected to do well in either treatment setting.

Most of the differences between home-treated patients occurred after the first month, suggesting to Harvard's Neutra that the initial psychological anxiety of hospitalization made the heart more prone to a fatal attack months later.

Dr. Paul Yu, former president of the American Heart Association and a specialist at the University of Rochester (N.Y.) Medical Centre, said he still believes that most heart attack patients should be treated in a hospital.

He explained: "I would not keep a patient home if I knew there was a potential danger for him to levelop ventricular fibrulation" — the wild, uncontrolled beating of the heart that most often causes death after an attack. It is treated in a coronary care unit by a jolt of electricity, shocking the heart back to a regular beat.

No matter how mild a heart attack appears, "the possibility for ventricular fibrulation is there," Yu continued. "No one can predict what will happen."

Dr. Alexander Langmuir, another Harvard specialist, predicted that the British findings will be "largely ignored" in the United States.

"I confidently expect, however, that an increasing proportion of patients with myocardial infarcts (heart attacks) in Great Britain will be treated at home, and that the British Medical Service will allocate few if any funds to the building or equipping of more elaborate intensive or specialized coronary care units," he said.

Coronary care units are expensive to build and to maintain. Yu estimated the patient cost at $250 to $400 a day, including nurses and doctors around the clock.

Treating patients at home, however, is easier in Britain than in the United States. More doctors in Britain are in general practice and make house calls, so the patient may be spared the initial anxiety of being rushed to a hospital emergency room. All patients in the British study were first seen by a doctor in their homes.

Nuetra estimated on the basis of the British study that more than 25 per cent of all heart attack patients could be treated at home.

NDP Convention

former NDP resources minister, has agreed to take a job as a researcher for the NDP caucus at MLA's pay.

She said the party owes Williams a great deal for his decision to resign his Vancouver East seat, allowing Barrett the chance to run in a byelection there and win the seat last week.

Delegates showed their support for the NDP caucus by defeating a motion from North Vancouver delegate Joyce Meisenheimer to censure the caucus for voting with the Social Credit government on its back-to-work legislation in the B.C. hospital workers' dispute.

In other labor-related matters Friday, more than 400 delegates in panel discussion voted almost unanimously for an amended resolution to support the Canadian Labor Congress when and if the national labor body calls a general strike to protest federal wage controls.

The resolution must win approval from the convention as a whole, but the weight of delegate support virtually ensures its easy passage in plenary.

Oil Pinch in Puget Sound

SEATTLE (AP) — Washington State's four refineries will receive about a third as much oil from Canada in July as they did last year, the U.S. Federal Energy Administration said Friday.

An FEA spokeswoman said that new Canadian oil export figures mean the four refineries will receive about 59,000 barrels a day beginning July 1, when Canada will reduce its over-all exports to 450,000 barrels a day.

Most of the oil will go to inland refineries, which have no way other than pipelines from Canada to receive petroleum supplies. Washington's refineries have a lower priority because they can receive oil from ships.

In 1975, Washington's facilities received about 178,000 barrels a day from Canada, down from the 202,000 barrels they averaged in 1974.

Canadian supplies fell drastically in March, when effects of the export cutback began to be felt in Washington.

Skies are slowly clearing over the north coast today in the wake of a disturbance which moved into the Interior of B.C. overnight. Elsewhere skies are mainly cloudy with some areas reporting the occasional shower. This disturbance which gave many localities the coldest afternoon temperatures on record for June 11 promises to break more records today. An area of high pressure moving in from the west will bring increasing sun and warmer temperatures to coastal areas today and Sunday and interior areas Monday.

Mercenary Admits Guilt

LUANDA, Angola (UPI) — An unrepentent "Col. Tony Callan" today accepted responsibility for all charges against the other nine Britons in Angola's mercenary show trial and then refused to answer further questions.

Callan, the soldier of fortune blamed for the execution of 14 Britons under his command, heads the list of 13 mercenaries including three Americans on trial for murder, destruction and other "war crimes" in the Angola civil war.

They face possible death by firing squad if convicted.

"Once they were in Angola they were under my orders. Anything they are charged with was my responsibility. Okay," he told the court, "I don't want to answer no more questions. I have made my statement."

Callan, a husky man with piercing eyes, made his statement after reluctantly giving the names of his parents, but refusing to say what he did in the British Army.

The five judges in the Popular Revolutionary Tribunal accepted his assertion of responsibility and allowed him to leave the stand after only 10 minutes of testimony.

Callan, a Greek Cypriot whose real name is Costas Georgious, and Andrew McKenzie were both accused Friday of killing British mercenaries to discourage desertion.

McKenzie, a Briton who lost his left leg in the final days of Angola's civil war last February, was next wheeled into the courtroom in a wheelchair to testify.

At the opening of the trial Friday, Kevin Marchant, 25, of Britain, testified he saw Callan and McKenzie shoot two Britons and order the killing of 12 more when Marchant and other mercenaries demanded to be sent home.

Abducted Refugees Released

BUENOS AIRES (AP) — Nineteen Chilean and other Latin American political refugees who were abducted in Argentina on Friday were released early today, United Nations officials said. Some had broken ribs and all had bad bruises.

The refugees, most of them Chileans who fled the rightist junta in Chile, said they had been tortured and were given 48 hours to leave Argentina by their unidentified captors.

The 19 refugees were among 25 taken from hotels Friday morning, the latest incident in a series of abductions and murders of foreigners seeking asylum in Argentine. A UN spokesman said the 19 were dropped off from trucks around here about 4 a.m. He said the fate of the other six is not known.

The Jornal do Brasil, a Rio de Janiero newspaper, called for the United Nations to find a way to stop such incidents.

"Learning the political identify of the kidnappers is of little importance; it is enough to define them as a band of murderers," the paper said. "It is necessary now . . . to find an efficient formula for fighting terrorist actions . . . We are returning in terms of civilization to the prehistoric age."

HALIBUT PRICES RISING

Victoria fish and chip eaters are going to pay more just for the halibut.

Starting at the beginning of the week the price of a piece of halibut in most city fish and chip shop will so up from 70 to 80 cents.

"There's just no way around it," said Edward Brady, of Brady's Fish and Chips on Burnisde.

"The price has gone up to the fish packers, and they're passing the increase on to us."

Brady said that since halibut has to be frozen for about a month before it is good fr frying, the price increase has been avoided so far. But the packers have finished last season's stock now, and starting next week will be using fish brought in this season.

That means the fishermen will be getting $1.37 a pound, up 40 cents over last season.

Fish and chip stores have been tld that the new price will be $1.78 a pound from the packers, taking into account handling costs there.

SEAPLANE TOWER

VANCOUVER (CP) — The long-awaited seaplane control tower for the Vancouver harbor will start operations next week, D. G. Allard of Transport Canada said Friday.

Located on the east side of Deadman Island off Stanley Park, the tower will be the first in Canada to handle solely float flights.

Allard said Vancouver harbor is the busiest sea plane port in Canada, with approximately 5,000 landings and take-offs a month.

AMIN

10 Died in Attack?

NAIROBI (UPI) — At least 10 persons were killed during a grenade attack on President Idi Amin and the Ugandan leader himself was slightly wounded, press reports said today.

In a front page story from Kampala, the early editions of the Sunday Nation newspaper said Amin spent the night in a hospital following the asssassination attempt and was treated for superficial shrapnel wounds.

An unknown number of persons hurled three grenades at Amin Thursday night, killing a man believed to be the presidential bodyguard.

Radio Uganda said the assailants had been arrested and were undergoing interrogation.

Nairobi press reports, based on interviews with travellers from Kampala, said unknown attackers hurled grenades at Amin's motorcade killing at least 10 persons.

The nation said troops sealed off the area, beat up a number of people and arrested others.

Residents In Kampala said the city was calm and normal today though a dragnet was still underway to arrest other person involved in the attack.

$900,000 Catch To Judge's $1M Award

TORONTO (CP) — Mr. Justice Sydney Robins of the Ontario Supreme Court has awarded a damage settlement of $1,041,197.85—one of the largest in Canadian legal history—to a 17-year-old Toronto girl who has been completely paralysed since being hit by a car three years ago.

However, Richard Sommers, lawyer for Bonnie McLeod, the paralysed girl, said the likelihood of collecting much more than $100,000—the amount of public liability insurance carried by the driver—is "almost nil."

Mr. Justice Robins made the judgment against Albert Hodgins, 51, of Toronto and his wife, Margit, who owned the car. Hodgins was convicted of failing to remain at the scene of an accident and fined $100.

The judge said $800,000 was for Miss McLeod's future care, including medical expenses and rehabilatation, and for loss of income. He said $200,00 was for loss of expectations and life expectancy and for loss of enjoyment of life.

The balance was to reimburse the Ontario Health Insurance Plan.

Miss McLeod, a Grade 10 student is confined to a wheelchair and is taken to school in a van.

Sommers said the $100,000 that Miss McLeod will receive from Sun Alliance and London Insurance Co. Ltd. and any other money collected from Hodgins and his wife will be paid to the official guardian appointed by the provincial government to oversee the interests of minors in such court cases.

Miss McLeod will begin receiving the interest from the money immediately and she will get control of the entire fund when she turns 18 in Toronto, the lawyer said.

USER-PAY TRANSPORT PROPOSED

OTTAWA (CP) — Transport Minister Otto Lang said Friday the government wants to eliminate politically-inspired subsidies which have built an unnecessarily costly transportation system.

Lang, defending the federal policy that users of transport services should pay their costs, said the old policy of piling one subsidy on top of another led to a mess of patchwork in the national transportation network.

He spoke in the Commons as MPs debated a Conservative motion criticizing the government's transport policy. Opposition MPs said the policy would not help eliminate regional disparity.

30TH HUHGES WILL

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Another purported will by Howard Hughes has been filed here — the 30th since the billionaire's death — and this one names the Howard Hughes Medical Institute as the sole beneficiary.

Arelo Sederberg, a spokesman for Hughes' Summa Corp. in Los Angeles, said Hughes was apparently in the Bahamas at the time the document was written in early 1972.

Later that year, Hughes went to Vancouver, but Sederberg said there is no indication that Hughes's Canadian travels ever took him near the Ontario town, a few miles west of London.

Authorities indicated they are taking the latest document somewhat more seriously than most of the others.

Assistant Clerk Elda Hanks of Clark County said the will names Chester Davis, chief counsel of Summa as executor of the Hughes estate. Summa is the Las Vegas-based umbrella corporation for many of the late billionaire's diversified holdings.

"Most of the wills just try to be funny," Mrs. Hanks said. "This one isn't."

$25,000 FOR DONORS

Four months after the lottery ticket they bought for Victoria city police won a quarter million dollars the coowners of a city grocery store have been rewarded with $25,000 each.

Carol Cluff and Peter Gregory of the Little Gem Grocery, 148 Superior, went to the police station Friday for cheque presentations by Inspector Douglas Grant, president of the Victoria Police Mutual Benefit Association which won the $250,000 Feb. 11 on a Western Canada Lottery ticket bought by the grocers and sent to the association in a Christmas card last December.

Indications are that the remaining $200,000 will be used mainly for retirement benefits to city police veterans. However an association meeting next week will officially decide its use.

Oddfellows 'Walk' Sunday To Assist Arthritics

A 20-mile walkathon will begin at 8 a.m. Sunday at the Oddfellows Hall, 1323 Douglas.

Object of the event is to raise a minimum of $10,000 to help arthritic and extended care patients.

Registration will begin 7 a.m. at the hall.

The event, planned to be an annual one from now on, is being organized by the Oddfellows and Rebekahs' external care hospital committee.

Chairman Bob Klassen reports some of the proceeds will be used to help pay off the debt on a $20,000-plus bus his organization presented to the Gorge Road Hospital in April. The bus is also used to transport arthritic patients to and from clinics.

The organization has also given a $16,000-plus bed to the Saanich Peninsula Hospital.

Klassen said the walkathon, to start at Oddfellows Hall, 1323 Douglas, will also provide money to finance field trips for hospital patients this summer.

Among those who will be taking part in the walkathon is MLA Dr. Scott Wallace.

The route will go up Johnson to Cook, from there to Dallas Road, along the Beach Drive scenic route to Cordova Bay to Mt. Douglas Park. The return leg will be along Shelbourne to Hillside, along to Cook; Cook to Johnson and down Johnson to the hall.

For the older or handicapped people a shorter walkathon has been arranged in the Centennial Stadium at the University of Victoria. Beginning at 10 a.m., the walkers will start pacing around the one-mile track.

Klassen said the 20-mile route will be patrolled by members of the Victoria Motorcycle Club and the Venturers' search and rescue team with two-way radios. The route will also be stationed with members of the St. John Ambulance Brigade.

Refreshment booths will be available, victualled with donations from city merchants. City merchants have also contributed prizes for the best walkers and those making the most pledge money.

"The schools are also involved and there are three big perpetual trophies for the three top schools with the biggest turnout," Klassen said.

Lobbying the AIB

Defiance by Kitimat aluminum workers of the third Labor Relations Board writ ordering them back to the job probably means contempt of court charges and possible jail terms for some union members. The smelter workers are wrong to disobey the law. Nor do alleged acts of sabotage against company property help their case in the public eye. Yet it is difficult to write the above sentences knowing that the smelter workers' anger is justified. In this labor dispute they are the victims.

After receiving an opinion from the federal Anti-Inflation Board the union accepted an eight per cent increase in the first year and six per cent the following year — well within AIB guidelines. At the time the workers were also under threat of a company lockout. Kitimat pulp and paper workers — another union with which the smelter union traditionally compares itself — did not accept the AIB guidelines and appealed their case. That resulted in a two-year increase of more than 25 per cent. Alcan, the smelter workers' employer, refused to consider anything above AIB guidelines, while the pulp and paper companies reached agreement on higher rates with their union. When Alcan refused to reopen the contract, smelter workers walked out illegally.

The culprit in this tense dispute is the AIB. Complainers who appeal to the board — a time consuming and expensive exercise — receive higher settlements than meek groups who agree to follow guidelines in the interest of national restraint. Federal budget figures show that the 300,000 workers who demanded special consideration from the board have received increases averaging 16.9 per cent annually. The 477,000 workers who accepted contracts parallel or below the AIB guidelines averaged increases of 9.2 per cent. Such revealing statistics will only increase labor's militancy. Powerful complainers and whiners receive special dispensation; the meek inherit nine per cent.

In an excellent editorial from which we have borrowed, the Vancouver Sun compares base rates of the Kitimat smelter and pulp and paper workers. In 1966, the base rate for both unions was $2.64 per hour; in 1972, it was $4.08 in pulp and paper and $3.98 for Alcan. In July, 1975 it was $5.34 for pulp workers and $5.38 for smelter workers. Under the new AIB agreements, though, the pulp and paper workers will initially receive $6.14 and $5.86 for smelter workers. By July, 1977 it will be $7.01 for mill workers as compared with $6.24 for smelter workers. The gap widens.

AIB Chairman Jean-Luc Pepin promised rough justice, but all these figures add up to a widening injustice. Clearly the AIB cannot give everybody the same thing. But it should adhere more closely to its own guidelines in handing down settlements. The 477,000 good citizens who have taken their lumps from the AIB are going to be enraged when they see some of the appealed settlements. If this discrepancy continues the bitter Kitimat dispute may be a microcosm of what could happen throughout Canada later this year. Finance Minister Donald Macdonald said in his budget that industrial settlements would probably average around 15 per cent this year. The figure is too high. It is up to the AIB to bring it into line or face scores of Kitimats.

Shivering on the Shore

Environment Minister Jean Marchand suffered something of a Freudian slip at Habitat last week. It was also very revealing about the thinking that must be dominating the Trudeau aministration as the country winds down to another election within the next two years. The salient remark was made as the minister talked to reporters in Vancouver about sharing Canada's riches. "How much can we deprive Canadians of their so-called standard of living without being defeated in the next election?"

If this government is going to live up to its leader's rhetoric some things are more important than winning the next election. It is not up to newspapers to give moral lectures on the art of governing. But governments should lead their people as a general principle. An administration that would raise the consciousness of its people, even at the price of defeat would be a refreshing anomaly in this country today.

Instead we see, one after the other, niggling little scandals emerging from Ottawa these days. It would appear that there are more to come, perhaps of even larger proportions. Meanwhile the prime minister flies around the country, obviously trying to bolster the sagging popularity of his squandered mandate. We have been through the "just society", "participatory democracy", the "new society" and now we are told "a conspiracy of love" is needed for international survival. The slogans are hung out like carrots on the end of a stick. When anybody takes a swipe at them they are quickly withdrawn and the government searches for a new carrot to dangle in front of a hungry populace.

Marchand's comment is indicative of a cynicism that infects this administration. When in trouble, trot out the leader on display and everything will be all right, seems to be the working principle. The country has had enough high-flown slogans and rhetoric that never reaches reality. If this government hopes to succeed at the polls again it will have to start acting on principle rather than reacting to ever growing fear of defeat. The whole world is in the midst of an undefined revolution of new expectations. This administration inserts a cautious toe in the troubled waters and remarks how cold it seems, drawing back. Better to lose the next election honorably, than cautiously shiver on the shore as the tide goes out.

RICHARD GWYN

Business Doesn't Like Him

OTTAWA — As Prime Minister Trudeau came into the room, a stand-out in a light beige suit with wide lapels and a pale, pink rose in his button-hole, the grey and blue-suited ranks of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association rose. When he finished his short speech, they applauded.

The reception was polite, dutiful, deferential almost. And unreal.

To learn what the businessmen really thought about their prime minister you had to pad around the back-rooms of the manufacturers' convention, drink in hand.

"I don't trust him that much," said one executive, his thumb and forefinger a quarter-inch apart. "If he makes another crack about the free market system, he'll get a punch in the nose," commented another. A Liberal MP, invited to one of the convention dinners, was told by an executive's wife: "I hate the bastard's guts."

Hatred is much too strong a word to use to describe businessmen's feelings towards Trudeau. Attitudes vary: the manager of a small Nova Scotia manufacturing plant, for instance, commented: "I really admire the guy's toughness."

Like FDR in '30s

The general antipathy, though, is unmistakable. Relations between Trudeau and the business community have degenerated to a point where they now are uncannily similar to those between American businessmen and the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt during the days of the New Deal.

Many, probably most, businessmen view Trudeau with an amalgam of suspicion, mistrust, dislike, incomprehension and some fear. He is seen, as was Roosevelt, as a leftist elitist, an intellectual who has never met a payroll and who instead has padded the payrolls of government.

After the famous year-end television interview during which Trudeau pronounced that "the free market isn't working," Agincourt, Ont. businessman Cliff Haughton published an ad with the heading Mr. Trudeau, You Are a National Catastrophe. Haughton received 30,000 letters, almost all violent in their condemnation of Trudeau.

That interview, preceded as it was by the imposition of wage and price controls and before that by the resignation of the business community's champion at court, ex-finance minister John Turner, aroused corporate spokesmen to a public fury.

Kenneth MacGregor, chairman of Mutual Life, warned that Trudeau planned to impose a U.S.-style presidential system that "may lead to a deterioration of morale and efficiency". Royal Bank chairman Earle McLaughlin (who in private derisively refers to Trudeau as "Haircut") declared that controls "won't work" and called for an election, "to see if that's what the people want". No doubt Trudeau had McLaughlin in mind the other day when he called bankers, "the worst bitchers of all."

Outrage no longer is expressed in public, largely because Trudeau since then has fallen silent about his "new society." Discontent is, if anything, growing. Though the CMA has so far supported controls, president Rodrigue Bilodeau took aim at the tightened profit regulations and warned: "The government cannot count on our automatic support . . . programs like this start falling apart when judged unduly punitive."

EARLE McLAUGHLIN
. . . calls Trudeau "Haircut"

A good deal of this crossfire has nothing to do with Trudeau and his personality and philosophy nor with the government policies of the moment.

Just as in the depression, business is searching for a scapegoat for its own problems. Corporations today are beleaguered and battered on all sides, accused of everything from polluting the environment to ripping off the consumer, and from hiring too few women and natives to paying too few taxes.

A recent survey of Ontario university students found that 77 per cent had a negative attitude towards business and that 86 per cent felt that the profit motive had done society more harm than good.

Government has responded to this public unease, and at times has magnified it. Beneath the banner of "the public interest," government has marched deep into the private sector, to regulate industries from housing to natural resources and to regulate issues from foreign ownership to land use.

Long too complacent and too arrogant and at times, in contradiction, too timid to tell its side of the story, business' main riposte has been to whine in public and in private to rely upon old boy contacts within governments.

Only Two of 28

The reality, which is obvious, is that the government-business relationship has changed as irrevocably in the 1970s as it did during the 1930s. Yet only the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Canadian Federation of Independent Businessmen, and both of these only tentatively, have begun drafting policy proposals as contributions to the post-controls debate.

Government failings are at least as plentiful — constant changes in policies and laws that leave business in complete uncertainty, harassment by petty regulations and incessant questionnaires, exorbitant public service salaries that drain talent from the private sector, and an indifference to the importance of the business community so pronounced that only two among the 28 cabinet ministers, Trade and Industry Minister Don Jamieson and Energy Minister Allistair Gillespie, can talk to businessmen in their own language.

It's a truism that business and government need each other. It's true also that, in the end, business is the more dependent. Business hostility creates major political problems for Trudeau. He always can remember, and no doubt does, that Roosevelt never lost an election.

EDITOR'S NOTEBOOK

The Lord's Day Act Outlives Its Relevance

As a teenager in Edmonton it used to rankle me that the only theatre open Sunday was the one where Premier Ernest Manning conducted his national radio show, Back to the Bible Hour.

Not only was this rank discrimination against unimaginative teenagers, it was a slap in the face to other religious minorities and atheists. Canada's official blue Sunday was enshrined by law in 1906 by The Lord's Day Act. Its purpose was twofold: to ensure Sunday's religious sanctity and to protect the workingman from seven days of toil.

In the ensuing 70 years the legislation has been considerably watered down through value changes and an "opting out" clause which lists 24 exemptions for "works of necessity or mercy." Since the Second World War most provinces have enacted comprehensive opting out legislation to allow certain cultural, recreational and entertainment events.

The mechanism used by the provinces is usually through municipal "permitting" bylaws within specified provincial limits. Not too long ago Victoria city council drafted a bylaw to forbid the selling of certain articles on Sunday. Its myopia, an endemic municipal fault, in concentrating on specific things resulted in a clamor from the merchant community. Never a group to tamper with commercial interests, the city fathers wisely shelved their silly bill and went back to sleep.

But the aldermanic dilemma was symptomatic of a larger issue: the Lord's Day Act, practically unamended since its inception, is a hoary piece of legislation that should be stuffed along with other measures such as the War Measures Act.

"The prohibitions of the Lord's Day Act appear rather severe on their face. Most Canadians today would be surprised to learn that federal law prohibits sales, business, transportation, employment, games, performances or public meetings where an admission fee is charged on Sunday," says the Law Reform Commission.

Of course, most of these bans have been neutralized over the years by de facto laws through provincial legislation.

Yet I find it fascinating, utterly fascinating, that an erudite body such as the Law Reform Commission feels constrained to issue a 136-page book in both English and French suggesting that the act be scrapped in favor of provincial Sunday laws.

What kind of coma has this country been in for many years that we must devote so much energy to these mundane matters now, while so many national and international crises go unheeded?

Canadians are still debating whether licensed drinking should be allowed on Sunday when the average house costs more than $50,000. Wallowing in our riches we cautiously and phlegmatically debate a morality the rest of the world dealt with 50 years ago.

Not that I disagree with the commission's proposals, but where have we been, why is reform so ponderous and controversial in Canada?

Back in 1963 the supreme court of Canada described the Lord's Day Act and its practical result as a purely secular and financial one which in the case of those who do not observe the Lord's day can cause a business inconvenience. Thirteen years later we're still wondering what to do.

The Lord's Day Act, according to the Law Reform Commission " . . . has as its purpose the promotion of the strict Christian view of appropriate conduct for the Lord's day . . . there is little room for the non-Christian to escape the net of federal prohibitions . . ."

To bring the law in line with the times the commission would have parliament repeal the act, thereby allowing the enactment of independent secular measures in those provinces and territories where the enforced observance of Sunday and other holidays is desired.

At first glance this looks like a case of passing the buck to the provinces where some woolly-minded righteous politicians still prevail. But on closer examination the commission presents cogent reasons.

Foremost is its view that under modern condtions the criminal law is an inappropriate vehicle for legislating Sunday observance. That should rank as one of the understatements of the year.

Among the other reasons — the current act deals largely with matters of local concern, but in order to do so it has required the manipulation of the law in such a way that it seems to say one thing while doing another. The commissioners are also skeptical that law can effectively compel virtue and morality. More pragmatically, the provinces have apparently expressed interest in assuming primary responsibility for Sunday laws.

While an orderly transition from federal to provincial law should not be delayed, the commission emphasizies that the provinces and territories must have sufficient time to review their own measures regarding Sunday legislation.

Before the provinces embark on comprehensive Sunday legislation they should tap public opinion. Sweeping changes regarding Sunday blue laws could have a ripple effect on other legislation such as provincial labor codes.

While it can be argued that the law should always lag behind society's latest fads or enthusiasms, it is frightening to see the increasing distance between Canadian law and modern reality.

The Law Reform Commission proposes, parliament disposes. But the lethargy of the latter on the many sensible recommendations to emerge from this commission is dangerous to our whole body of law. Our grandfathers left fine traditions, yet other times require other ways.—G.R.O.

Capital Dilemma

In the editorial June 3, Figures That Convince, you suggest that an examination of the murder rates in various retentionist and abolitionist countries, in particular reference to Great Britain, provides compelling information in support of abolishing the death penalty.

I think you will agree that it is not essential whether we study the experience of a particular country over a span of years or compare the murder rates between retentionist and abolitionist countries. The argument ultimately hinges upon proof of a connection between imposing the death penalty and the number of murders. In other words, is one person deterred from murdering another in the knowledge that, if caught and convicted, he will most likely hang? The abolitionist is convinced that murderers are not deterred and, therefore, capital punishment should be abolished because it has no effect on the murder rate. The retentionist, on the other hand, believes that murderers are deterred and capital punishment provides a useful means of controlling violence.

Murders in Canada, the United Kingdom, the United States and other countries can be divided into two distinct groups. One group includes the so-called crimes of passion which are characterized by their impulsivity, use of alcohol and drugs and the existence of some kind of relationship between the murderer and victim; e.g., husband and wife, mother and child, a pair of lovers or acquaintances, etc. The other group is characterized by premeditation and cold-blooded planning. Crimes of passion make up approximately 80 per cent of all murders and the premeditated group approximatly 20 per cent of all murders. A moment's reflection will perhaps suggest that the crimes of passion group are unlikely to be deterred by the threat of the death penalty since the killings occur in the heat of emotion, whereas the premediated group are likely to be deterred by the death penalty. This indicates that neither the abolitionist nor the retentionist argument are totally justified. If the death penalty is abolished, planned acts of violence including sedition and treason may be left without effective means of control. If the death penalty is imposed, however, many individuals who are unlikely to harm again will be legally executed.

I would like to suggest that this is one of the essential dilemmas facing our politicians in the very difficult decision that has to be made in the near future in this country.—Colin S. Sheppard, Member, Board of Directors, John Howard Society, 319—620 View Street.

Rentalsman

It has always been my belief that, besides handling matters concerning rents, another of the rentalsman's functions would have to do with the conditions of rented quarters. Perhaps I am wrong!

Whether or not my belief is correct, don't you think it would be to the benefit of the public if he assumed the duties of a sort of ombudsman, where it is found that tenants are not receiving their just dues?

It is bad enough to have to accept an annual increase of 10.6 per cent in rent, while no other province permits more than eight per cent, which is sufficient in most cases.

Time was when accommodation was more plentiful, that landlords competed with each other to secure tenants, but no more! In these days landlords generally seem to be out for the last sanguinary nickel, without disbursing more than they are obliged. Many of my friends occupying older properties complain, indeed as I do, that their landlords will not put a lick of paint on their walls, even though the plaster is showing through.

While I dislike anonymous letters, I'm afraid the publication of my name and address would result in a notice to vacate. — Undecorated.

Long Sincere

I agree with your correspondent (Rotten and Mean, June 4) in condemning the very biased article by Norman Gidney concerning the Vancouver East byelection.

Ralph Long, the Social Credit candidate, has said he believes most men enter politics with a sincere desire to serve and that he has been very much disillusioned about politics. He feels that the way many persons and most of the news media treat politicians is inexcusable.

Mr. Long has justification for that opinion in view of the barrage of insults he endured on the open-line radio programs and in the news media treatemnt of his candidacy, e.g. when as a guest on one program he was told by the host that his candidacy was "an exercise in futility," followed by the implication that he had gall to even think of running against "the most popular man in the province." Coquitlam voters must have been surprised to hear that.

To run in the province's most formidable NDP stronghold against the leader of the official opposition party, an experienced, widely-known politician, took courage. Moreover, Mr. Long is obviously a deeply sincere, intelligent and compassionate man who has spent a great deal of time in service to those in need.

With these qualities, it is to be hoped that he will reconsider his decision not to re-enter politics. We need men like that. — A.F. Davies, 464 Vantreight Drive.

Will the Real Opposition Leader Please Stand?

By STEPHEN CLARKSON
Canadian Forum

Two new leaders of Her Majesty's loyal opposition moved into their official quarters in the national capital this winter. To observe their contrasting styles is to see in action that strange counterpoint between myth and reality that marks the schizophrenia of Canadian politics.

The one was chosen while delegates from the four corners of the country cheered, other candidates cried and the pundits scrambled to explain with instant hindsight why Joe (Who?) Clark, the man from High River, Alta., had beaten the favorites of Bay Street and Baie Comeau to the Tory top.

Since then the leader of the official Opposition's every movement has been documented, his wife's every liberated word has been (Ms)-quoted, and Mr. Clark has spurned no proffered microphone to make himself, and the voters of Canada, believe that what he says really matters.

Meanwhile, the other opposition leader quietly settled into his quarters across from the House of Commons, moving about Ottawa with the confidence befitting one selected by professional merit. He too has submitted his credentials to the governor-general, but only after first swearing his loyalty to the president of the United States.

He too has a broad constituency in Canada, the hundreds of American multinational subsidiaries growing in every organ of the Canadian economy. The title on the door reads Ambassador of the United States of America in Canada, but we should learn to know — and if not love, at least respect — Thomas Ostrom Enders as the leader of the U.S. party.

ENDERS
. . . 'frankness'

We didn't elect him, of course, but neither did most of us select Mr. Clark. Those who might like to certainly cannot vote against him at the next election. Nor, for that matter, can any citizen with a Gadarene Swine complex vote him any more power than he already has.

That doesn't mean Mr. Enders doesn't wield real political heft (as opposed to would-be power) on Parliament Hill. It does mean that what Mr. Enders has to tell Canadians is far more important in the here and now than what Mr. Clark might say — if and when he is able to raise his eyes to the political horizon.

Indeed while the leader of the Canadian Opposition has been pontificating at every hint of governmental impropriety, the leader of the U.S. Opposition has been methodically laying his platform before the public. He has chosen his podiums with deliberation, first Ottawa's Canadian Club in March, then, in April, the Empire Club of Toronto, not to mention his appearances on such prime television shows as CTV's W5.

As a result, we know more about the continental program of Mr. Enders, spokesman of the U.S. presence in Canada, than we do about the national policy of Mr. Clark, commander of the Tory troops.

And we should take heed, since what Mr. Enders proposes today could well be what our benevolent leaderships will impose tomorrow. For let us not delude ourselves, the Enders line is no Nixonomic shopping list thrust under our nationalist noses. On the contrary, the Enders analysis is as persuasive in print as this engaging, intelligent man is pleasant in person. person.

His message is one of reason, not raison d'etat. Gone is the puerile rhetoric. Come is a frankness that few Canadian politicians would allow themselves.

To start with, Mr. Enders acknowledes the problem. There are tensions in the Canadian-American relation ship, bigger now because of economic insecurity. But the issues themselves are manageable. Canadianization of potash, commercial deletions, water diversions: there is nothing here that level-headed men can't resolve together over a good bourbon, we are given to understand.

He also recognizes Canadians' psychic concerns as his own. "Our need to be ourselves, to exercise sovereignty, to control our own destiny," he sees, "remains as intense and as fundamental as ever."

The next note Mr. Enders strikes is on resources. It is unsentimental. It does not flatter the Canadian ego. Quite the opposite. He puts down the Canadian position. You're running out of resources faster than we are, he told W5 viewers. In other words, Washington is saying, don't try to pull an OPEC (Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries) on us. We can go it alone if you try to abuse your commodity power.

Still, the United States doesn't want to go it alone, he hastens to add.

It's not so much that we need you: the expansion of U.S. direct investment in Canada is "largely complete." We in the United States don't need to export more capital. The shoe is on the other foot since Canada needs and will continue to want U.S. money.

Now, he continues, there are some acceptable ways to defuse the situation. Given "that U.S. economic influence in Canada through investment and trade is incomparably greater than Canadian influence in the United States," go ahead and reduce your dependence. Debilateralize. You're concerned about being in bed with an elephant? Well, let's consult more. Let's agree on OECD's (Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development) standards for multi-national corporate behavior.

There is just one proviso. By all means do what you think best, just so long as you don't "disadvantage U.S.-owned firms already established here in favor of their Canadian-owned competitors." (Don't attack the real issue and we will get on fine.)

Anyway, we are to be delighted to hear, there is a better approach: the united way. Indeed history should be our text, for, in Mr. Enders' view we already have a model, the post-war experience when "our trade, our capital flows, our travel, our scientific and cultural exchanges grew at rates unprecedented anywhere." (We built the roads, they took the resources, as Eric Kierans paraphrased it.)

With that period of the Canadian-American relationship as Mr. Enders' model it should not surprise us if his answer now is "the expansionary solution." (If we all grow then the pie will be bigger to slice—and Canadians won't notice how small their slice really is.)

"The United States is ready to co-operate with you," the U.S. ambassador told the Empire Club, "in finding new expansionary solutions." Forget that limits-to-growth nonsense. (Of course, if you expand your own resources, then you'll need our capital. And if you want our capital, then you had better keep your hands off U.S. enterprise.)

The Enders Doctrine will probably go down as well among the policy-makers of the East Block as it did among the diners of the Empire Club. It is an astute restatement of North American liberalism, blending a sympathetic acknowledgment of Canada's aspirations with a formula designed to perpetuate their frustration.

The post-war period was a model, it is true. It proved what growth at any cost produces: a threatened ecology, an economy out of control, a culture alienated from itself. In a word, ecofolly.

Mr. Enders professes he has never met a continentalist on either side of the border. He talks of the equality of our two countries and claims their economies are in symmetry. A fearful symmetry, indeed. It is a sophisticated version of a continental growth pact that the leader of the U.S. party in Canada is offering.

Teddy Roosevelt would have been proud. In this year of the Bicentennial, the U.S. plenipotentiary speaks reasonably and carries a big brief.

At Least Our Mistakes Are Public . . .

By BORDEN SPEARS
Toronto Star

No question about it, the popular press is not universally popular. Its credibility is under attack, its motives are suspect, and its influence is often seen as destructive. There are frequent suggestions that press freedom should be restricted by law; in Britain, the threat has been made officially.

All this is naturally disquieting to journalists who would argue that the press in most of the democracies, and certainly in Canada, has never been so scrupulous about accuracy, so concerned to be fair, and so conscious of its social responsibility. No meeting of editors and publishers these days is complete without a session devoted to seeking the causes of dissatisfaction. But the answers are not easily apparent.

In private conversations recently a scientist, a teacher, and an investment counsellor announced that they have stopped reading newspapers. Only the teacher offered a specific reason; he thought the recent strike of Metro teachers had been badly reported and unfairly interpreted. This destroyed his confidence in the rest of the news reports.

The scientist found too much space devoted to the trivial and unimportant. On subjects of interest to him, he said, he goes to original sources for complete and authoritative data. This should of course be effective for those subjects, but it may leave some gaps in his store of general information.

The investment expert reads only the business pages; for the rest, he said, the newspapers are superficial and untrustworthy. Pressed for instances, he cited a seven-year-old news story of which he had no personal knowledge but which in the light of his own experience he found hard to believe.

The three comments are fairly typical, but it will be seen that they are not highly useful as guides to improvement. The teacher may himself have a biased view of an issue that touches him closely. The scientist simply dismisses all interests but his own. The investment man is unconvincing; at least, no journalist would be likely to condemn financial counselling on the basis of some bad advice given seven years ago.

It may be, in any case, that the newspapers are unduly alarmed about criticism. There is simultaneous evidence that their influence has not waned as the chief medium of current information.

A Toronto author recently toured the U.S. to promote his latest book, a popular success. "I'll tell you one thing I learned," he confided on his return. "Don't underrate the effectiveness of the newspapers. Two lines of print are worth as much as any amount of exposure on TV and radio."

It is worth remembering that while the volume of criticism has increased in recent years, it has been invited and given exposure, to a degree almost obsessive, by the press itself. This is a radical change since a generation ago, when newspaper barons rejected criticism out of hand and refused even to acknowledge their most evident mistakes.

Nowadays, in an access of accountability, the newspapers give prominence to every attack on themselves. They establish press councils to monitor their own performance, and publish the findings. No story of recent times was so thoroughly reported as the year-long investigation of Canadian mass media by Senator Keith Davey's committee. The subject is a constant of magazine and television fare. The Financial Post has just published a 20-page supplement on the ailments of the media, and the Financial Times is engaged in a similar examination.

Publications that dissect and analyze and second-guess the press have become a thriving industry. Pollution is out, press problems are in. Small wonder that there is an enthusiastic public response to the declaration of open season.

The newspapers make another contribution to the sport when they meticulously correct their mistakes. There was a small example the other day when the Star published some misinformation about a job-placement program at one of the community colleges. When the error was discovered, it was corrected; but the Star, which takes responsibility for what it publishes, did not excuse itself by mentioning that the error originated with the college. To the reader, the paper had been guilty of another inaccuracy.

The fact is that the press, which lives by disclosure, is probably the most open of all institutions and the most responsive to its public. It is more open, for example, than elected governments which refuse to disclose the staff studies and working papers on which public policy is based. It is more open than most private enterprise which interprets privacy in broad terms.

No other medium of public information, commonly available and accessible for reference, matches the newspaper in the volume of data recorded day by day. Opportunities for mistakes in detail are infinite, but most of it can be trusted. Errors of fact and aberrations of judgment are blazoned for all to see. The newspaper's sins are committed in public and subject to open reproof. Is there a better assurance of good faith?

THE GLOBE AND MAIL
An Editorial

It might have been a moment to tug at the heart, catch at the throat and prime the tear ducts. There they were, our elected leaders and humble servants, the members of Parliament, ready to sacrifice, not only a 7 per cent increase of their $24,000 salaries, but also a $700 addition to their $10,600 tax-free expense allowances. All this, for us, as a pledge of their devotion to restraint.

But then a few dissenters, like Marcel Lambert (PC, Edmonton West), had to shatter the hush of modest heroism. Elected officials, he said, are "easy game to pick on." They are being treated as "sacrificial lambs."

The barnyard analogy may be moving, but it is risky to take into the House of Commons. It makes the electorate think of being sheared, or milked, and from there it is the shortest of hops to the thought of our elected servants jostling one another at the trough.

Mr. Lambert has a lot to learn about being a sacrificial lamb. This office, like all noble ones, has its code of behavior. For a start: a sacrificial lamb does not bleat.

Call Off the Vigilantes

THE SUN
An Editorial

Surrey Mayor Ed McKitka's plan for vigilantes roaming the streets of his municipality in search of badmen could be passed over for the hare-brained scheme it is if it were not, unfortunately, for the fear of some weak-headed souls sharing the mayor's Cowboy Bob shoot-'em-up fantasties and translating them into grim action.

* * *

That is always the risk. That is the sombre thought underlying what otherwise would be no more than another laughable statement from a rather silly man.

Just like his war against art — funny until the first book gets burned. So now he is proposing a posse of 35 citizens in two-way radio cars to prowl the beaches and back alleys and shady nooks to sniff out crime. "It'll shake the hell out of bandits in Surrey," says the mayor. "We're going to put them all behind bars."

Of course, when substance is separated from shadow, the mayor's vigilantes tend to become a little wispy. They are not, as the mayor seemed to suggest, part of any recognized civil defence or emergency measures organization. They are not any auxiliary of the municipal Royal Canadian Mounted Police detachment (which seems anxious to keep them at arm's length).

* * *

They appear to be no more than some private group of Citizen's Band enthusiasts who have approached the mayor and volunteered their services. By all means — let them do what every good citizen should do: call the police if they see someone suspicious or engaged in crime. For that they do not need gas subsidies (as the mayor promised) to drive around playing cops and robbers.

* * *

How long before one of these people gets carried away and tries to make an arrest on his own? How long before someone gets hurt, would-be policeman or would-be bad guy? How long before there is the pack and the lynch-mob and we forget about law and civil rights?

If Surrey is not being adequately protected against crime, then let the mayor and his council members approach the RCMP for more policemen. They are the trained professionals. This protection on the cheap the mayor is talking about is dangerous, frightening and wrong.

Beware of Gulls Bearing Clams loft

A word of advice to birdwatchers with receding hairlines; beware of gulls bearing clams, they might mistake your pate for a hard substrate.

Aeschylus discovered a variation of this nearly 2,500 years ago but he didn't live to tell about it. Mind you, legend has it that his pate was the target for a tortoise, not a clam, directed his way by an eagle, not a gul. Either way, the event brought a sudden and decisive end to the great Greek playright's career.

While nothing so disastrous is likely to befall the unwary with unadorned heads today, the fact remains: gulls have a habit of dropping hard-shelled molluscs of various kinds to break them open and get at the contents; and a hard surface, substrate, is better than a soft surface for such work.

But there is more to it than that, as three scientists working with Glaucous-winged Gulls in the San Juan Islands discovered a few years ago.

* * *

Having heard that Herring Gulls in Europe were just as likely to drop their whelks on a soft surface, such as sand, as on a hard surface, such as rock, wood or cement, those three scientists decided to test the common clam-dropper of the Pacific Northwest against its European counterpart.

In four months of research, during which the Butter Clams were falling like rain, our stoical troika managed to not only avoid being hit but, among other things, to prove that our gulls are smarter. Out of more than 750 drops, our gulls made the error of using soft surfaces for their drop-points less than 40 times.

But there's more; our research team also discovered there was a relationship between age and proficiency as a clam-dropper. For example, yearling gulls often fumbled their clams before getting them up, and even when they did get a good hold on the shell they were 10 times as likely to drop it on a soft surface as on a hard.

By the time these youngsters had two years under their wings they were handling the clams with much more confidence and had reduced their incidence of soft-surface drops to where they were only slightly more frequent than their hard-surface drops.

At four years they were professionals, selecting hard surfaces for their clam-dropping more than 80 per cent of the time.

There was another interesting relationship between age and clam-dropping ability. According to the figures revealed in the San Juan study, young gulls made nearly all of their drops either from less than three feet or more than 10 feet. Their more mature peers seldom made a drop from less than 12 feet and were more often up near the 30 or 40-foot level before releasing their clam.

Even to a terrestrial clam-shucker, the advantage of height in clam-dropping seems obvious; you'll break a lot more—and a lot faster—from high-level than from low-level drops.

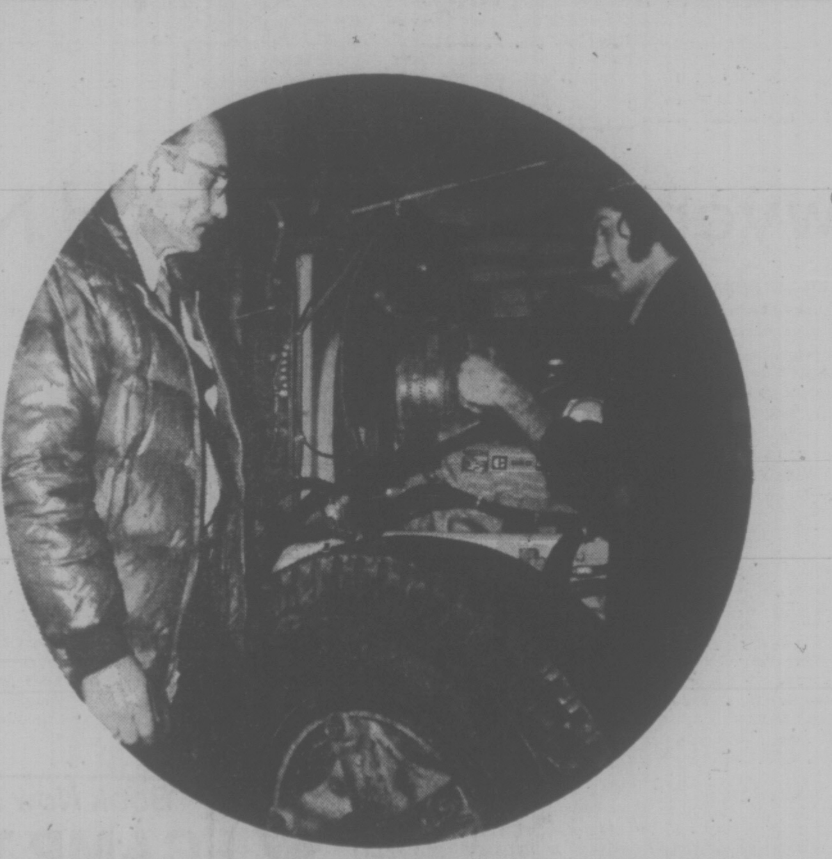
But there's a catch because in the world of the gull anybody's food is fair game and robbery is an honorable profession. So, if you drop your clam from on high you stand the chance of losing it to some opportunist waiting nearby. Of course, experienced adults have all the angles worked out and can judge their position, the position of any other gull near them, the speed of a falling object and the direction of the bounce. Therefore, they don't lose too many clams to the opportunist.

* * *

The young gull, on the other hand, learns by experience—and you learn quickly in gull society or you don't learn at all.

To the adults clam-dropping has become an art. Our researchers found that the old birds not only select the most effective surfaces but even sometimes defend these surfaces much like territories. Young gulls will usually be ushered off such dropping sites, whether carrying a clam or not. Adults will be permitted roosting rights but not dropping rights. Should an adult show up with a clam and a covetous eye for the dropping site, it will be summarily evicted.

Gulls apparently don't drop everything they pick up; only clams or other molluscs. Now if they could only get that message across to the crows — particularly the one that keeps dropping an old bone on our roof. He seems to be enjoying himself but he sure keeps strange hours.



"Scientific Wear Analysis (S.O.S.) is a useful, inexpensive preventive maintenance tool"

Jack Ralston, equipment superintendent, District of North Vancouver, recently ordered Caterpillar 3208 diesels for two new garbage trucks and specified Scientific Wear Analysis (S.O.S.) as part of their comprehensive maintenance program. "It's a useful, inexpensive preventive maintenance tool that signals future internal problems," says Ralston.

Regularly scheduled oil samples are taken from each Cat engine and sent to Finning's lab for analysis. "We got a high aluminum deposit in a recent sample we sent in," said Ralston. "After identification of the metal, Finning's lab technician suggested we look for problems in the crankshaft. This led us to the thrust bearing which we checked for end play. The problem, however, proved to be in the crankshaft itself; an oil gallery boring was improperly drilled. The crankshaft was replaced on warranty; downtime was minimal."

With Scientific Wear Analysis (S.O.S.), you too can detect minor problems before they become major expenses, and service can be conveniently scheduled to avoid sudden disruptions in production. On a continuing basis, Finning's Scientific Wear Analysis (S.O.S.) is recommended as an inexpensive service program for all Cat equipment owners. Remember, Scientific Wear Analysis (S.O.S.) is an early warning system that signals potential internal machine failure. Just another in a complete range of CAT PLUS support services from Finning. Find out more. Call your Finning representative today for more information on Scientific Wear Analysis (S.O.S.).

S.A. Lays Murder Charge

Manchester Guardian

CAPE TOWN — In a step unprecedented in South African legal history, four security police officers will be tried next week on a charge of culpable homicide (manslaughter) arising out of the death of a black detainee.

When he made the announcement in parliament Friday, Justice Minister Jimmy Kruger did not name the four accused. The trial follows the death in Durban last March of Joseph Mdluli, while in the custody of the security police.

In the last decade at least 20 people, all of them blacks, are believed to have died while held by security police for questioning. On rare occasions, the minister of police has made payments to the widow or family of a dead man, but this is the first criminal trial. Kruger, though a tough exponent of law and order, is known to have strong views on the treatment of prisoners held under "no-trial" security laws.

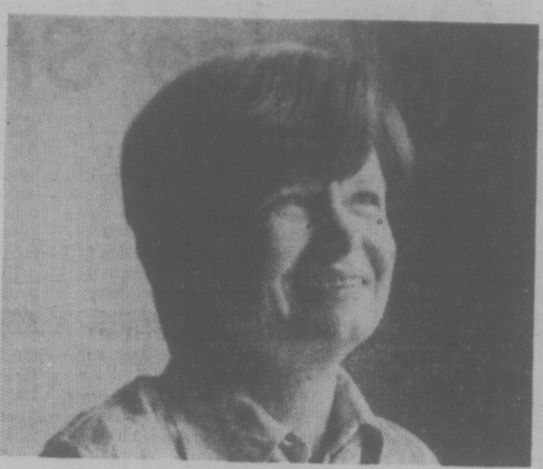
Mdluli, a former member of the banned African National Congress, was arrested in his home in a Durban township last March 13 and taken away — wearing only a raincoat and shoes — by the security police. The next day the police called to tell his wife that he was dead.

Mrs. Mdluli and her 25-year-old son later saw the corpse at the mortuary. She clained that it had "severe swelling across the forehead, the left lower lip was bruised and cut and the stomach was bloated to twice its normal size." Mrs. Mdluli said she was prepared to swear under oath that her husband had not had these injuries when taken away.

The family appointed a pathologist to attend the post mortem examination, but he was prohibited from releasing his findings. A Durban African barrister, I. L. Skweviva, was deprived of his passport when he began an investigation into the death on behalf of the family. The family solicitor, Griffiths Mxenge, an African, was also detained under the terrorism act and has not been released.

In April Kruger confirmed that Mdluli had not committed suicide. He and the commissioner of police here later were served with demands for damages of $25,000 by the family's solicitors who said they had been led to the irresistible conclusion that Mdluli's death was "caused by unlawful acts on one or more members of the security police."

Since the death the Progressive member of Parliament Helen Suzman has repeatedly questioned the minister about the date for the inquest.



Inger Hansen

She's Convicts' White Knight

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

Inger Hansen doesn't look like a modern-day white knight but as far as the 9,000 inmates in Canada's federal penitentiaries are concerned, she's just that.

And perhaps with good reason.

For this Danish-born lawyer is a fighter . . . a fighter for prisoners' rights.

Officially she's the penitentiary service's correction investigator.

Unofficially she's an ombudsman, a title she prefers because it more aptly describes her role and function.

In Victoria this week to attend a local justice council panel and the annual meeting of the B.C. Bar Association of which she is a member, Miss Hansen holds a rare distinction.

She is one of the few people in Canada who has immediate and total access to any of the 50 federal prisons. She can go into any federal jail, at any time, ask for any file, for any reason, no questions asked.

It gives her enormous power, but she notes, not the concomittant power to change something she may not like.

She treads the thin line separating the independence of the bureaucracy from the political machinery. Her mandate, she said, is limited to looking and listening and making recommendations if she or her staff should discover an administrative error, oversight, abuse of power, or prisoner injustice.

By and large her job involves dealing with "little things," she says. Like an inmate who complains he has lost $35 while being transferred from a police lockup to a prison. Or another who wonders why the court imposed a 30 day jail term when he had the money to pay the fine.

"They're small, specific problems mostly," she said. "But every time we are able to help, it all adds up to a general improvement of the total system."

She says she deals with the "here and now" and not with any dreams of what the corrections system might or could be.

"We cannot substitute our value judgments for that of the penitentiary," she says.

"When the penitentiary has discretion — for example, deciding that an inmate is not ready for a temporary absence pass, we cannot override its decision . . . unless we can show the action of the administration was biased.

"But if an inmate has a right, an enforceable right based on law, then I guess you could call us his champion . . . then we take out our white horse."

This year she expects her office will handle more than 800 complaints. Last year the number was 782. The year before, 595.

"There's obviously a need," she says.

One of her recommendations led to a study into the use of dissociation cells. The study led to a Supreme Court ruling that certain forms and uses of solitary confinement were cruel and unusual punishment and thus a violation of basic human rights.

Born in Denmark in 1929 Miss Hansen emigrated to Canada when she was 20. After various jobs she entered the University of B.C. law school. She practised ciminal law in Vancouver for nine years then went to Ottawa to work on the new juvenile delinquency legislation.

Three years ago she became Canada's first corrections ombudsman, with headquarters in Ottawa.

As a neophyte investigator she visited every institution in the country six times the first year, a total of 300 visits.

Now she has help — three staff officers. Together they intend to visit each institution on nearly a monthly basis.

She says the success of her office depends on gaining credibility with the inmates.

Her recipe is a simple one.

"We try never to gossip, never to promise anything over which we have no control and try to be honest in our dealings."

Sometimes other factors come into play. She says she once had an inordinate number of requests for interviews at a particular jail and couldn't understand why. She soon found out. It appears two inmates were former clients of hers when she was practising law and were recommending her to all of their friends.

A strong believer in smaller prisons, a higher ratio of well-trained staff in inmates, and greater use of community corrections programs, she says Canada's prison system is no better nor worse than those in other countries in the western world.

"In most cases people don't get better by being incarcerated," she says adding it wouldn't make that much difference if the prison was a Victorian institution like B.C. Pen, or a luxury hotel.

The problem remains. "We don't know yet how to change a person's motivation, at least not in the long term sense.

"Until we are able to understand human behavior we shouldn't even pretend we know the answers."

B.C. Set to Pick Up AIB Reins: Gardom

If the Supreme Court of Canada rules federal anti-inflation laws unconstitutional, the provincial government is ready to take its own "initiatives," Attorney-General Garde Gardom said Friday.

In a speech to the B.C. Bar Association at The Empress, Gardom said some people see the issue now before the court as the most important constitutional case in 50 years.

Ottawa is arguing "an enlarged view of the peace, order and good government clause" in the British North America Act, he said, while B.C. holds that the regulation of wages and prices mostly within the provincial private sector is within provincial jurisdiction, supported by an unbroken line of cases dating back to 1881.

B.C. says the anti-inflation legislation could only be justified in a "national emergency." While inflation is a matter of national concern and urgency, it doesn't constitute a national emergency.

Changes in family law will be discussed at a conference of attorney-general and Justice Minister Ron Basford in Vancouver next week and Gardom said there is one major disagreement here.

"We agree that there is a need for general reform in the distribution if family property, in the law surrounding the dissolution of a marriage, that maintenance laws aren't necessarily a 'forever' situation where employment opportunity exists, and that children's rights should be better enshrined and receive more protection under the law.

"But we do have a very major disagreement with the concept of allowing the federal government to do it all."

Not only is the administration of justice traditionally a provincial responsibility, that government is more sensitive to particular needs of its people.

"Putting it bluntly, we feel Victoria is better able than Ottawa to set up a system of redistributing the family home, the family car and the family cow."

Efforts to standardize rules nationally are rarely flexible enough to adequately meet the unique needs of Canada's different regions, he suggested.

Gardom said the sooner Canadians agree on a way to transfer jurisdiction over the BNA Act from Britain to Canada the better.

"But once the crate is opened and the constitution is here, what's next? Firstly lets keep it off a pedestal and out of the National Museum. It's far too vital to become an artifact."

The worth of a constitution depends on its acceptance by all regions of the country so they must all join in the debate which questions its legitimacy as a "national rule-book." This makes any sort of unilateral move "totally out of the question."

On the Supreme Court of Canada, the attorney-general noted it dates from 1875, starting with six members which grew to seven in 1917 and to nine in 1949.

It has today far from "country-wide" representation, he suggested. The last B.C. member of the court was Mr. Justice Locke, appointed 29 years ago and retired in 1962.

JUVENILES ON SPREE SLASH SCHOOL, CARS

DUNCAN — Three juvenile boys appeared in Family Court here Friday charged in connection with a spree of vandalism that resulted in several thousand dollars property damage.

A Duncan RCMP spokesman called the Wednesday night spree one of the worst in recent years.

He said the Koksilah elementary school was entered, files ransacked, water facets turned on, ink, paint and oil smeared over desks, floors and walls and attempts made to set fire to some rugs.

School officials have estimated damage at about $4,000.

The trio was also charged with breaking into and stealing $300 worth of knives, rifles and jackets from Bucky's Sporting Goods, $100 worth of watches from Yorktown Inn, $250 worth of tools from the Koksilah Nursery and a quantity of diesel fuel from Cowichan Concrete, all on the same night.

THEFT REPORT 'MISCHIEF'

DUNCAN — An 18-year-old youth has been charged with public mischief and theft under $200 in connection with a reported robbery at a service station in Duncan Wednesday night.

A Duncan RCMP spokesman said Johanes Theun DeGraff was charged after an investigation indicated the robbery was a hoax.

Police said they received a report at 11:35 p.m. Wednesday that a lone bandit had robbed the Pay-Less Service Station on Trans Canada Highway north of Duncan, of $150 dollars.

Telephhone Harassing Cleared

A 33-year-old Victoria man has been cleared in B.C. Supreme Court in Victoria of both his conviction and sentence on a rarely-laid charge of making harassing telephone calls.

The case against Stanley Dale Hanna, 647 Michigan, ended when visiting Vancouver County Court Judge Lee Skipp granted a preliminary motion by defence lawyer Douglas Gray, who said the charge was defective because it did not disclose an offence.

Hanna was charged with harassing Alex Patterson of Colwood Taxi by making repeated phone calls Oct. 19, 1975. He was convicted Dec. 31, 1975, after a Victoria provincial court trial before Judge D. K. McAdam, and later was put on probation for two years.

Gray argued that the evidence showed phone calls were made to Colwood Taxi. But, he said, the charge should have stated the calls were made to Patterson and instead it did not name any recipient.

Skipp agreed the charge had to include a named recipient of the calls to have any merit. Both conviction and sentence thus were thrown out.

Evidence in the provincial court trial showed the two men had been friends and Patterson said he could be phoned for help when Hanna had problems. Hanna phoned several times in the weeks before Oct. 19 but could not make contact.

That night, he decided to keep phoning until contact was made. Hanna testified he called about 25 times and Pat-

Lawyers Stress Legal Aid Need

By ROGER STONEBANKS
Times Staff

Lawyers in British Columbia must ensure maintenance of legal aid services, the retiring treasurer of the Law Society of B.C. told the annual meeting Friday.

Hugh Legg of Vancouver said the legal profession has supported the idea that "no person shall be deprived of legal assistance through lack of financial means."

But recent government action has caused cutbacks in financial support for Legal Aid.

Legg said it is only as a result of a recent grant of $500,000 by the Law Foundation to the Legal Aid Society that "more drastic curtailment has been avoided."

He suggested all lawyers have — "or should have" — great concern.

"If ever the legal profession has a duty to the public, it surely must be to protect and assist those deprived persons whose very deprivation renders them unequal in the struggle to obtain equality before the law," he said.

"Our profession has the privilege of independence and the right to govern itself. Spokesmen from the profession have frequently said that this is essential if the lawyer is to protect the citizen against the inroads of government interference with his private rights.

"I suggest that today our professional responsibilities are being tested with the prospect that a significant group of deprived persons may go without legal aid.

"We must ensure that legal aid services which we have rendered in past years are not substantially diminished and if there is a danger of their diminishment through lack of government financial support that we must muster our energies to prevent this from happening."

Legg stepped down from the top post in the Law Society, the governing body of the province's more than 3,000 lawyers, and was succeeded as treasurer by Thomas K. Fisher of New Westminster. Fisher has been a bencher — a member of the governing council of the Law Society — since 1967.

Legg also warned the annual meeting at the Empress Hotel that while special efforts by a sub-committee placed 75 University of B.C. law school graduates in articling positions with law firms, 15 were still without articling positions.

Benchers would have to re-examine the articling program in light of the increasing number of law school graduates and the difficulty in placing all of them in the one-year articling positions required before a person is called to the bar.

"My sentiments are in favor of ensuring that all who graduate from our law schools obtain articles but this ideal may not be possible to achieve if our present fears are borne out by events in the not-too-distant future," he said.

Legg said he was "delighted" to know that the legislature gave first reading this week to an amendment to the Legal Professions Act which would allow action to be taken against a lawyer because of incompetence.

He said the benchers adopted a report two years ago which recommended changes to the Legal Professions Act to enable benchers to deal with members who are incompetent.

Woman Freed In Murder Case

VANCOUVER (CP) — Teengia Andrews, the woman who told police in a taped telephone conversation that she had murdered two neighbors, was found not guilty of murder punishable by life imprisonment Friday in British Columbia Supreme Court.

The jury of six men and six women deliberated for about eight and one-half hours before finding Mrs. Andrews not guilty in the fatal shooting last Sept. 2 of Robert Cameron Bowness and Frances Mabel Doran.

Mr. Justice W. A. Craig said in his address to the jury that he "has never seen a more senseless and motiveless slaying" in the 25 years he has been a lawyer and judge.

In another development related to the case, Herbert Handy, the man Mrs. Andrews was living with at the time of the murders, was charged with threatening the life of Mrs. Lily Sumi, who testified for the Crown on Thursday.

Mrs. Sumi had told the court that Handy confessed to her a month ago that he was the one who shot Bowness and Doran.

During the trial, Crown counsel John Rowan said Mrs. Andrews was covering up for someone else.

Police said they found Handy's fingerprint on the .22-calibre rifle that was the murder weapon, and found his prints on a wine bottle Mrs. Andrews said she had purchased on the day of the shootings.

Handy, who asked for the protection of the Canada Evidence Act, said he was not in the house at the time of the murders. Asked where he was at the time, he replied, "I don't know."

Rowan said he thought that both Mrs. Andrews and Handy were present when the murders took place.

In previous testimony, Mrs. Andrews admitted she called police half an hour after the murders, but said she could not remember what she said in the phone call and, pleading not guilty, she said she did not shoot the two people.

She told the court that two days prior to the murders, Bowness had accused Handy of stealing $60 from him.

Mr. Justice Craig said if the argument over $60 was the motive for a double murder, "I would be astounded."

"Two people were murdered for reasons we will never know," he said.

PRESS TO HEAR CUPE INQUIRY

NANAIMO (CP) — The news media will be allowed to cover the industrial inquiry hearings into a new labor agreement between the Mid-Island Employers Association and the Canadian Union of Public Employees, locals 606 and 401.

Louis Lindholm, a Victoria lawyer named chairman of the five-member Provincial Industrial Inquiry Commission, said Thursday the media could be present at the meetings.

Dick Winkelman, spokesman for MIPEA, said the decision revolved around statements made by CUPE representatives and the terms of reference set Thursday.

Larry Katz, a CUPE official from Ottawa, said MIPEA had embarked on a vicious anti-union campaign.

Nick Mieras, CUPE local president, said earlier MIPEA was designed for confrontation and union-busting.

Winkelman said the statements were highly provocative and not in the intent of the spirit of the negotiations.

He said he moved on the point of personal privilege to have the media present for the negotiations because he had a total faith in the media.

Winkelman said MIPEA was in favor of the media being present while CUPE was against it.

Six hundred employees returned to work Thursday after Wednesday's signing of a memorandum of agreement calling for binding arbitration between CUPE and MIPEA — ending a 10-week civic dispute.

Persistent Visitor Stays—In Jail

A 32-year-old American, thrown out of Canada four times, was sentenced Friday in county court to three months in jail for illegally returning to Canada.

Curtis Ronald Cook, also known as Robert Reed, has been held in custody since March 30.

Judge H. L. Skipp told Cook, who is from Los Angeles, that "you really have a deplorable record as far as this matter is concerned."

Defence counsel Mike Hutchison said Cook "desperately" wants to live in Canada, to rejoin his wife and child, although his wife has lately refused to see him.

Crown counsel Bob Hutchison recited Cook's history of coming into the country illegally, being thrown out, and then re-entering, prompting Judge Skipp to comment at one point that "it seems to be a minor industry."

Cook came to Canada in the fall of 1970, was ordered deported but won an appeal in 1972. But he was ordered deported in 1973 and lost this appeal.

But, said Hutchison, he returned to Canada after a deportation order and was again ordered out of the country Dec. 30, 1974.

Cook returned once more in March, 1975, was arrested in Kamloops and deported. Last January he came back again, was arrested, sentenced to 30 days in jail and then deported.

Once more, he returned and was apprehended by police and sentenced to 14 days for possession of marijuana, said Hutchison. At this time, he was indicted for unlawfully returning to Canada having been deported in mid-February.

Rock Gardens

TORONTO (CP) — The federal department of agriculture says a slope facing north is ideal for a rock garden. This is true especially if the incline is such that the sun in winter does not directly hit the soil and there is no thawing in early spring.

PEN GUARD FIREARMS MUDDLED

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — Four members of a six-member tactical squad that ended a 41-hour hostage-taking incident a year ago at the British Columbia Penitentiary fired their guns, an inquest was told Friday.

Corporal Bob Rutherford, the chief investigating officer for New Westminster City Police, told the inquest into the death of prison classification officer Mary Steinhauser that the information was provided in interviews with the tactical squad members.

Cpl. Rutherford said two members said they fired three shots each and two members said they fired one shot each. He did not name the officers who said theyfired the shots and he was not asked for their names.

The inquest is investigating the circumstances of Miss Steinhauser's death.

She was killed by a guard's bullet when the tactical squad rushed the area where she and 14 other prison wrokers were being held hostage June 11, 1975, by three knife-wielding prisoners.

Guards rushed the hostage-holding area when they heard sounds of a conflict in the room.

Cpl. Rutherford told Coroner Doug Jack and the seven jurors Friday that three of the weapons issued to guards June 9 (the first day of the siege) were not signed for.

He said two other guns were signed out June 10 by "S. Lakusta," who was not a member of the squad, and a sixth gun was not entered on an official log book as having been issued.

One of the guns signed out to S. Lakusta was identified as the weapon which fired the bullet that killed Miss Steinhauser.

Prison employees do not normally carry revolvers and Cpl. Rutherford said that the tactical squad members grabbed their guns off a table before going to the hostage-holding area.

He said a subsequent investigation disclosed that the six guns were collected by Albert Hollinger, a guard, and returned to the room where the guards had been standing by. He said the guns were unloaded of both empty and armed shell casings and the shells were put in an ash tray.

Cpl. Rutherford said two prison guards then took two of the weapons for use in escorting two of the captured prisoners and the guns were later returned to the same room at the penitentiary. The guns were then carried to the prison armory and later turned over to New Westminster police.

The fact that the guns had changed hands so many times, both before and after they were fired, was given as a prime reason why the guns were not dusted for fingerprints.

Cpl. Alex Purgavie, head of the New Westminster police identification squad, said that if fingerprints were taken from the guns, "the only thing it would mean is that a person had at one time touched the gun — it certainly wouldn't mean he had fired that gun."

Local Students Only for Kelowna

KELOWNA (CP) — Okanagan council has decided that students from outside the Kelowna college district will not be allowed to attend the Kelowna branch of Okanagan College this fall.

Okanagan council voted Thursday in favor of restricting university transfer courses to students living in the Kelowna college district.

Ron Jeffels, president of the college, said the decision was made because of budgetary restrictions.

Jeffels said plans of increasing staff at the already crowned Kelowna branch had to be changed when the college learned that the college budget could not handle the increase.

He said the emergency plan will be in use for only one year and that he was directed to write each individual school district suggesting the students attend the college closest to their homes.

Dr. Eric Buckley, president of the faculty association, said the association is against the plan.

Dr. Buckley said the proposal doesn't solve the problem. The problem, he said, is the lack of instructional staff in the Kelowna college.

Virginia Cook, representing the Osoyoos School District on college council, said the policy is discriminatory to students outside the region.

Water-Skiers Rescue Plane Crash Victims

PENTICTON (CP) — Harvey McGowan, 46, of Princeton, and his wife Thelma, 43, were rescued by two water-skiers Thursday after their light plane crashed and sank into Skaha Lake south of this Okanagan community.

McGowan was about to land his Cessna 150 plane at Penticton airport when the engine failed.

A spokesman said three or four boats approached the scene as a couple who had been water-skiing arrived and took the couple on board their craft.

The spokesman said they were treated in hospital for minor injuries and were later released.

Chairman Sought

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — The British Columbia Egg Marketing Board has asked Agriculture Minister Don Phillips to appoint an interim chairman to the board and hand a restructuring request by producers to the provincial super-board.

Al Yablonski, B.C. Egg Marketing board manager, said Friday the board met with officials of the agriculture department Thursday.

He said the request for an interim chairman was made because the board cannot function without either a Vancouver Island or interior director.

Don Cozens of Duncan and Peter Jans of Salmon Arm, said they will boycott board meetings until structural changes are made.

Cozens said he and Jans will attend meetings if an interim chairman is appointed.

He said Vancouver Island and interior producers are standing by their threat to stop paying levies if changes to the board structure are not made by June 30.

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) William B. Laurie of Vancouver, newly-elected president of the Institute of Chartered Accountants of B.C., said Thursday disturbing comments by politicians and media people claiming accountants can juggle figures to produce financial statements have undermined public confidence in the reliability of audited financial statements.

Laurie, executive vice-president and secretary of Dawson Construction Ltd., made the comment at the 71st annual meeting of the Institute of Chartered Accountants.

Pacific Press Row Not Goldenberg's

VANCOUVER (CP) — Senator Carl Goldenberg, a well-known Montreal labor consultant, said Friday he was not involved in any way in the Pacific Press Ltd. labor dispute with its Joint Council of Newspaper Unions.

Goldenberg, in a telephone interview, said he was contacted recently by Len Guy, secretary-treasurer of the British Columbia Federation of Labor, about whether he would serve as mediator.

He said he asked Guy whether any one else had been involved in the matter as a mediator and was told that Vancouver labor consultant Clive McKee had been involved.

"I then said I was not available and asked why they did not go back to Clive McKee," said Goldenberg.

Ed Fairbairn, local president of the International Typographical Union, and Vic Barber, Pacific Press production manager, were involved in an agrument Friday about who had suggested that McKee mediate the dispute.

Goldenberg said Friday that not only was he not prepared to mediate the dispute, but also he was not involved in settling a dispute between photo-engravers and stereotypers at Pacific Press. The dispute between the two unions led the stereotypers to withdraw from the Joint Council of Unions.

Goldenberg, an impartial umpire of the Canadian Labor Congress in jurisdictional disputes between affiliated unions, said he wrote the CLC an opinion on Tuesday. He said he believed the Pacific Press dispute was not of a jurisdictional nature as defined under the CLC constitution.

He said the constitution deals "basically with raiding" between unions and "this dispute is not raiding."

RUGGED, CONVENIENT. Tough PVC construction is long lasting and won't rot. Panels slide up individually or together, so you can shovel out from the bottom. An inflatable cover keeps heat in, rain out. And there are no unpleasant odors to attract bugs.

Warfare Rules Vague

GENEVA (Reuter) — Diplomats from 107 countries ended two months of negotiations Friday without agreement on revision of the rules of international warfare.

Conference president Pierre Graber, Switzerland's foreign minister, told reporters that significant differences remained between governments on treatment of mercenaries and guerrillas, rules governing reprisals and war criminals.

The negotiations, under International Red Cross Committee auspices, will resume next April to revise the 1949 Geneva Warfare Conventions protecting soldiers and civilians against maltreatment in time of war.

In the final plenary session, delegates agreed that mercenaries should not be treated as regular prisoners of war. But there were differences over defining mercenaries and whether governments should be left free to decide how to treat them.

Nigeria, which raised the issue, wanted treatment of mercenaries left to national laws, but many delegations felt they should receive minimum convention protection.

This protection would include respect for human dignity, the right to trial and a ban on torture or degrading treatment.

The conference, which convened in 1974 and again last year, was called to add two protocols to the four 1949 conventions.

Delegates reached agreement, subject to completion of international protocol texts, on protection for medical staff and journalists and identification of medical aircraft, Graber said.

Medical aircraft may be identified by a flashing blue light and by using certain radio and radar signals to escape being shot down before becoming completely visible.

Governments also agreed to allow authentic medical personnel and journalists freedom of movement when possible and to treat them as civilians having a right to protection.

Die Fledermaus Adaption Here On Weekend

A company paying its third visit to Victoria is the Greater Vancouver Operatic Society, giving two performances of Pink Champagne at McPherson Playhouse.

The light opera is a new adaptation of the lovely work by Johann Strauss, Die Fledermaus. It will be seen today at 8 p.m. and Sunday at 2 p.m.

This English language version is by Eric Maschwitz and Bernard Grun and is based on the Vienna production of 1874.

On previous visits to this city the society, which has been active for 27 years, has presented Gilbert and Sullivan's The Mikado and Pirates of Penzance.

HOT FILM?

If you're travelling by car in a hot climate take a few precautions to protect your valuable pictures.

First, never leave your camera on the dashboard or in the rear window. Don't put the camera in the glove compartment unless you tested the temperature inside it on a hot day. A small case to hold camera and film beneath the front seat is a good answer. If you have a cooler with your, store the extra films in it — in moisture-proof containers — and take them out a few hours before using so they can warm up again. Keep the exposed films in a separate container in the cooler.

AIB Rules Published On Banks

OTTAWA (CP) — The anti-inflation board will measure bank profits only on their domestic operations under new pricing guides released Friday. Original regulations issued in February included foreign operations in the calculation of bank profits.

The board released draft regulations placing chartered banks and other financial institutions under the same general rules that are to apply to other companies under changes announced in the May 25 budget.

These changes will restrict companies to earning a profit margin of 85 per cent — down from an original 95 per cent announced when the controls program began last Oct. 14 — of the profit margin earned in earlier years.

Like other companies, the banks will be able to choose which period to compare their current profits against. Banks were previously required to measure the profit margin against the average of margins earned in the five fiscal years up to Oct. 31, 1974, but now have the option of measuring it against the margin in the year up to Oct. 31, 1975.

The new regulations apply to the current fiscal year, but include a transitional provision whereby a bank which would be permitted less profit under the new rules can defer the additional profits to the following year.

Under this provision, a bank could adjust its operations in the following year to avoid earning excess profit, which the program requires it dispose of.

CoL Refutes AIB: Labor

QUEBEC (CP) — The sharp rise in the cost of living proves anti-inflation regulations are not working, the president of the 164,000-member Confederation of National Trade Unions said Friday.

Marcel Pepin told delegates to a union meeting the May statistics justify the union's opposition to the regulations, adding: "We have said all along that this wasn't a law to curb inflation; it's a law to level off salaries."

"During the first few months they were applied, the rise in the cost of living slowed, but for reasons other than the anti-inflation regulations," he said.

SOVIET OUTPOSTS IN CANADA

OTTAWA (CP) — The armed forces said Friday they have aerial photographs of Soviet Union-occupied ice islands within Arctic territory claimed by Canada.

The forces said surveillance over the ice islands, research stations on large sheets of ice that drift through the Arctic, has been under way since the 1950s.

In late April, one identified as North Pole-22 was photographed by an Argus patrol plane about 500 miles from the pole. The island measured 3½ miles long, more than two miles wide and about 94 feet thick.

The aircraft crew said the Russians waved at the Canadian plane and some were taking photographs.

The forces pictures showed more than 100 people, 10 to 15 prefabricated huts, nine aircraft and three helicopters on the island.

Information on the ocean cover, bottom and atmosphere is provided by the stations to the Arctic and Antarctic Scientific Research Institute in Leningrad.

Canada has claimed sovereignty over the Arctic from the Yukon to the North Pole to Baffin Bay but the claim has not been recognized by other countries.

Both the Soviets and the United States have not attempted to conceal their operations from about two dozen ice stations they have established in the Arctic in the last 25 years, defence officials said.

The ice islands drift through the Arctic either ending up in the Atlantic where they melt or running aground on the Arctic coastline and breaking up.

Food Corporations Slammed

CALGARY (CP) — Corporate concentration in Canada's retail food industry is costing Canadians seven cents extra in every dollar they spend, a New Democratic Party MP said Friday.

Lorne Nystrom, here for an appearance at the Calgary Labor Temple, said at a news conference that most of the additional costs help pay for unnecessary stores built by major chains to destroy their competition.

He said the retail food industry is controlled by George Weston Ltd., Dominion Stores, Canada Safeway and Steinberg's with the result "Canadians are ripped off by three or four corporations."

The Saskatchewan MP said a study commissioned by the Food Prices Review Board showed large chain stores controlled more than 76 per cent of the grocery market in 1973, considerably more than the 67-per-cent share shown in a similar study in 1966.

Large chains have a distinct advantage over independent stores, he said, because they have several methods of controlling prices.

AIB Ignores Steel Hike

OTTAWA (CP) — The anti-inflation board has decided not to intervene to request rollbacks of price increases averaging about eight per cent by major steel producers.

The companies, including Steel Co. of Canada Ltd., Toronto, are raising prices for a broad range of products that will result in higher consumer prices.

Among the affected products are hot-rolled sheet metal, metal used in auto and appliance manufacturing, as well as tubular steel and grinding balls.

The companies had given the board 30 days' notice of their intention to raise prices and in some cases have already started charging the higher prices.

N.W.T. INDIANS SUSPEND CLAIMS

OTTAWA (CP) — A philosophical shift within the Council of Yukon Indians has suspended land claim negotiations for at least several months and possibly for as long as one year.

"The council has adjourned negotiations until it feels that the people at the community level have an understanding of aboriginal rights and the implications of an agreement in principle," Daniel Johnson, interim chairman of the council, said in an interview from Whitehorse Friday.

"There has to be positive direction from the membership at large before negotiations can resume."

That might be four to five months away or perhaps a year, he added.

Federal officials had set last March 31 as the target date for an agreement in principle. The negotiations involve how much land, money and mineral royalties the Indians should receive for extinguishing their aboriginal right to the entire territory.

There had been growing concern among some council members that Indian negotiators were not consulting enough with the people back in the communities. At a meeting late last month the concern broke into the open.

The first strike in the 31-year history of the Hospital Employee's Union has ended.

It never really needed to begin.

The Union has been ordered back to work by the Provincial Legislature, which has now enacted into law Bill 75, the Hospital Services Collective Agreement Act.

The Union will obey the legislation: it has ordered an end to the strikes which had begun at seven British Columbia hospitals before the government ordered a 21-day cooling off period on May 20, 1976, and has withdrawn the strike notices it served on more than 25 hospitals all around the province during that cooling off period.

The legislation which was placed before the Legislature earlier this week showed, very clearly, that the strike which so disrupted the delivery of health care in this province was unnecessary.

It provides — with only one change, the length of the collective agreement — that all the recommendations previously handed down by Industrial Inquiry Commissioner D. R. Blair will become a part of the Union's 1976 collective agreement.

Those recommendations, of course, had already been ratified by the Union as a collective agreement, even before the Health Labour Relations Association so precipitously rejected them last April 27.

It was that rejection by the Association, and that rejection alone, which made the strike inevitable.

Now, after almost three weeks of escalating strike action, after chaos has been created in the delivery of health care, after our members, against their will, have been forced to take strike action which inconvenienced, dismayed and confused the general public, after the morale of hospital workers all over this province has been destroyed, the government has made law what the Union was willing to accept in the first place.

What this all means is that you, the taxpayers of British Columbia, have been cheated.

You have been cheated, and are being cheated, of hundreds of thousands of dollars, dollars being spent to perpetuate the existence of the Health Labour Relations Association, which has shown itself incapable of dealing with labour relations in this province's hospital industry.

If the government is going to have to deal, ultimately, with labour negotations in the hospital industry, why should taxpayers' money be wasted on the Association?

Why shouldn't the Union bargain directly with the provincial government, as it would like to, thereby eliminating the costs of maintaining a "bargaining group" which doesn't bargain, an employers' association which is funded by the government so that the government won't have to deal directly with the Union but seems incapable of even that task?

Interesting question, crucial questions.

The answers may well determine whether the Union will be able to, once again, start building a record of strike-free collective bargaining in this province, or whether strikes, work stoppages and disputes are to be the new order of the day for British Columbia hospitals.

We don't want that.

You don't want that.

Write to the Hon. R. H. McClelland, Minister of Health, and the Hon. Allan Williams, Minister of Labour, Parliament Buildings, Victoria, and tell them so.

Jailed Drug Offender Swap Discussed by U.S., Mexico

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The possibility of a swap of U.S. citizens imprisoned on drug charges in Mexico for Mexican drug offenders held in the United States has been raised in talks here between State Secretary Henry Kissinger and Mexican officials.

The idea, it was learned, was one of "a number of rather ingenious and interesting proposals" Kissinger said he received Friday from the Mexicans. "Intensive discussions" on the prisoner exchange are to begin shortly.

Mexican authorities have been accused of mistreating the 500 U.S. citizens imprisoned in Mexico and of preventing access for U.S. consular officials and lawyers.

Kissinger told a news conference that an even-larger number of Mexicans are in U.S. jails. He said the objective of negotiations with Mexico is "to alleviate the general situation of individuals being held in prison in a foreign country."

In a joint communique, the talks between Kissinger and Mexican President Luis Echeverria were described as "warm and friendly," focusing on the urgent need for international economic cooperation.

CONCORDE LOUDER THAN EXPECTED

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The U.S. Federal Aviation Administration, in its first report on the Concorde's air and noise pollution, said Friday the supersonic plane is up to 41 per cent louder on landing and 57 per cent louder on takeoff than expected.

Public complaints to the FAA during the week covered by the initial survey included reports of frightened children, disturbed animals, pain and ringing in the ears of people on the ground, and fear the craft was flying too low.

But the report showed Concorde sometimes is quieter than expected and occasionally less noisy than subsonic jets.

It also cast doubt on arguments that the extra-low frequency sound from the SST's engines pose a vibration hazard to buildings near airports.

The report covered 12 British Ariways and Air France landings and departures at Dulles International Airport from May 24 to May 31, the first week of commercial flight to the United States.

The report gave a first look at the impact of the Concorde on Dulles and its surrounding communities in northern Virginia just outside Washington.

Noise measurements made one mile from the runway during landings showed the Concorde hitting between 109.6 and 120.6 perceived noise decibles (the FAA's unit of measurement), compared to a predicted 116.5 in the environmental impact statement.

Missouri Delegates Wooed

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. (AP) — President Ford and Ronald Reagan, battling each other for uncommitted and unchosen delegates to gain a hold on the Republican presidential nomination, sought Missouri's 19 remaining delegates at today's Republican state convention.

The former California governor brought his campaign to Missouri on Friday literally on President Ford's heels. Both met personally with the delegates.

Ford proclaimed "I can be elected" and Reagan, who was scheduled to address the convention today, said he would be a stronger candidate than Ford, especially against Democrat Jimmy Carter.

In Georgia, meanwhile, aides to Carter predicted a comfortable margin for him of more than the 1,500 delegates votes he will need for nomination at the Democratic national convention. With most of the opposition already falling into line behind him. Carter prepared to start a series of meetings with former challengers.

375 Given Psychosurgery

Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Psychosurgery — surgery that destroys some of the brain to try to relieve mental problems — was performed on an estimated 300 to 375 men and women in the United States last year, despite pleas to ban it on grounds that it is "cruel" and "experimental."

The estimate, made by Dr. Elliot S. Valenstein of the University of Michigan Friday is based on a survey ordered by the federal commission for the Protection of Human Subjects of Biomedical Research.

It is the first national study of the extent of psychosurgery and its effects.

The commission—charged by Congress with recommending rules to regulate all medical experimentation—heard reports on the good and bad effects of psychosurgery as it opened its consideration of the operation at a meeting at the National Institutes of Health in Washington.

It heard pleas to allow such surgery as a proved and beneficial treatment and as an important experiment.

It also heard a spokesman for one neuroscientist's group argue that "if these procedures are performed at all, the surgeon should have not only the patient's consent to perform an experimental procedures, but also the approval of an expert committee or agency."

"There is no agency to regulate surgery," said Dr. Kenneth Heilman, a Gainesville, Fla., neurologist representing the International Neuropsychological Society. "Perhaps this or a simillar agency should be set up to protect patients, not only from psychosurgery but from the many other surgical procedures which have not been demonstrated with controlled studies."

Commission member Rep. Louis Stokes (Dem-Ohio) argued for prohibition of the technique because "it has no therapeutic value," because "it is impossible" for patients to give true informed consent and because it has "awesome potential as a tool for social and political repression of minority groups, political dissenters and the poor."

Prison Coffee Probe

WASHINGTON (WP) — Virginia officials are investigating the coffee served prisoners and staff at the state Penitentiary in Richmond because a sample of coffee grounds was found to contain "more crushed stone and glass fragments than coffee."

Philip R. Brooks, director of the state department of purchases and supply, said no injuries or illnesses have been reported by anyone who drank the coffee brewed from the contaminated grounds. He said filtration prevented pieces of stone and glass from reaching the drinkers' cups.

Trapped Star Sings Away

LONDON — Don Giovanni reached for a high note at the Royal Opera House in London Friday night and fell through the floor.

He stuck there, in the person of singer Ruggero Raimondi, trapped up to his waist and supported by his elbows and singing for dear life.

"This hole just opened up in the floor and Ruggero went through it," said Sir Geraint Evans, who was singing in the Mozart opera when the stage trapdoor gave way under the evening's star.

"He's a big fellow, and he was trapped by his leg," Evans said.

Raimondi, who stands 6 feet 2 inches, struggled to get free.

Evans and his other co-performers, still singing, tugged and pulled. Eventually Raimondi climbed out, unhurt but shaken, with his sword bent into a curve.

"They were magnificent," said Critic Hilton Tims, who was in the audience. "They carried on without letting the incident upset their vocal equilibrium."

LONDON — Elizabeth Ray said Friday she did not want to hurt Rep. Wayne Hays and was "very sorry" her former lover had been hospitalized after taking an overdose of sleeping pills.

"I would have been frightened to death if I had known that my revelations would turn into all this," Miss Ray said.

"In fact, I am frightened to death now."

Meanwhile, Hays, rapidly improving from an overdose of sleeping pills, was on his feet and "complaining about everything," his doctors said.

CALGARY — A woman who performed an impromptu dance while dressed in a see-through veil at the 1975 Grey Cup game was acquitted Friday on a charge of public nudity.

Provincial Judge Brian Stevenson, said he found the antics of Clarice Nadia Whitma, 35, of Calgary, "foolish, ridiculous and designed to bring attention to herself," but ruled the act was not criminal.

"In this permissive society, exposure of female—or, for that matter, male—bodies is commonplace," said the judge.

OTTAWA — President Seretse Khama of Botswana opened a five-day official visit to Canada Friday, pressing his country's case against neighboring white-ruled Rhodesia in private talks with Prime Minister Trudeau.

MORRISTOWN, N.J. — The Superior Court judge who first heard the Karen Anne Quinlan "right-to-die" case has rejected a motion from a right-to-life group to have the comatose woman returned to a hospital.

Judge Robert Muir, who presided over the trial here last November, on Friday told William Richter, who represents the Human Life Amendment Group: "This court has no jurisdiction in this case. You are in the wrong place and that is that."

'Don't Like Honor'

OTTAWA (CP) — An 80-year-old Ottawa woman has refused the Ontario Medal for Good Citizenship. She says she will return it if it is sent to her.

Ann Byles, a Salvation Army member, has been visiting chronically ill patients for the last 40 years but does not consider herself deserving of the award.

"I don't like this honor," she said. "It's a privilege for me to do what I do. I am not going out of my way. Any honor I should get should come from the Lord himself. I couldn't refuse him."

Four Ottawa students are also among the 15 recipients to whom the medals are presented for actions "in a particularly generous, kind or self-sacrificing way."

'WORTHY DULLNESS' LABEL TO QUEEN'S HONOR LIST

LONDON (UPI) — Queen Elizabeth made composer Benjamin Britten a peer for life today in a handout of honors marking her official birthday.

Group Capt. Douglas Bader, a legless flying hero of the wartime Royal Air Force, became one of 21 new knights created in the second list of royal honors distributed in a month.

The first list, a personal choice of outgoing prime minister Sir Harold Wilson, created an enormous storm of controversy because it honored staunch capitalists and Wilson's personal servants.

Today's list, prepared by Prime Minister James Callaghan's office, "has an air of worthy dullness," the Times of London said.

But it honored a wide range of figures from the arts, the public services and sports.

They included: ballet dancer Lynn Seymour; 89-year-old farce playwright Ben Travers; Australian Malcolm Williamson, the newly named master of the Queen's musick; national theatre architect Denys Lasdun; opera singer Gwyneth Jones; and the TV comedy team of Morecambe and Wise.

Britten was one of four new life peers, entitled to seats in the house of Lords but whose lordly titles die with them.

The others were conservationist Barbara Ward, historian Prof. Asa Briggs and Sir Philip Allen, former permanent undersecretary at the home office.

Ice skater John Curry, winner of the world championship earlier this year, was given the Order of the British Empire, as were comedians Eric Morecambe and Ernie Wise.

Travers, Miss Seymour, Miss Jones and author Olivia Manning were made Commanders of the British Empire order, as was Williamson.

Similar medals went to television newscaster Richard Baker, woman jockey Meriel Tufnell, soccer goal-keeper Pat Jennings, rugby player Mervyn Davies and Scots singer Andy Stewart.

Taunts Push Indian Women Into Kidnapping

BOMBAY (CP) — "I'm very rich. My father left me property worth $200,000, my husband owns a chain of grocery stores, the middle-aged woman told police. "But I'm extremely unhappy."

The woman, a native of Lucknow in north India, had been arrested for stealing a new-born child from a local hospital.

"I stole the child because I have no child of my own," she ex-plained. "This was my only chance of happiness."

The child was recovered from the woman's home within 48 hours. Press reports said the police do not intend to prosecute her. The child's mother "fully understands."

A 26-year-old housewife was caught stealing a seven-day-old male child from the maternity ward of a hospital in Calcutta. "I was desperate," she said. "When I did not conceive even after nine years of marriage, my husband threatened to divorce me."

In the town of Hubli in south India, a village woman was beaten up by a crowd after she was suspected of trying to kidnap a four-year-old boy from the local market. "I know it is a crime to steal another woman's child," she said. "But I have been shunned by the women in my village because I have no child of my own."

Social workers feel that while child-sealing should be condemned, something should be done to help childless women lead normal lives.

"In Indian society, having no child is not merely a source of personal unhappiness; it is a disgrace for which the childless woman, especially in backward villages, is taunted by her relations," says Savitri Mehta, a social worker of Rajkot, Gujarat state.

Mrs. Mehta said seven married women in Gujarat tried to commit suicide last year because they were branded as "barren." Thanks to Mrs. Mehta, four of these women were able to adopt children.

KING NATURE HOUSE TO OPEN JUNE 19

Opening ceremonies for the new nature house at Goldstream provincial park will be held Saturday, June 19, at 2 p.m.

Savage lines up donor days

Got Time for a Pint With Gerry Savage?

Did you know that duelling is legal in Uruguay provided both parties in the dispute are registered blood donors?

Well, it's true. I read it in the Times not too long ago — a one-paragraph UPI story from Montevideo.

And now that little gem of nonsense helps Gerry Savage out whenever people ask him: "Why should I give blood?"

Of course, Gerry Savage, supervisor of the Red Cross blood donor clinic in Victoria, has plenty of other reasons why people should give blood.

Apart from gratification received from the act of giving ("Your blood the gift of life" is the Red Cross slogan), there is always the possibility that some day you or someone in your family might need a transfusion.

"You will never know when you may need help from the blood bank," Gerry points out, "but the blood bank knows when it needs help from you — and that's right now."

It's all a question of the economic situation encroaching on the fight to save lives: but the last time a series of clinics were held on the Lower Island officials found themselves 335 pints short of their target. That's a lot of blood, and the Red Cross is starting to feel the pinch.

Donor clinics are held here normally for a week and it's usually in the third week of each month.

It's our turn again next week and Gerry hopes something like 1,300 pints will be collected this time.

(Clinic times are 2:30 to 8 p.m. next Monday and Tuesday at Red Cross House, 1046 Fort Street; 9 a.m. to noon and 1:15 p.m. to 3:30 p.m. Wednesday at HMCS Naden, Building 33; and 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Thursday and Friday for the Parliament Buildings at Newcombe Auditorium). All of the clinics are open to the public.

A team of nurses, aides, technicians and drivers from the provincial blood bank in Vancouver come over to conduct the sessions but Savage needs a lot of help from his secretary and a squad of volunteers to be able to conduct between 60 and 70 clinics a year in his area south of the Malahat.

If you have never given blood, or even if you've been a casual donor, you may wonder what happens to it once it's left your arm.

It is, says Gerry, collected in plastic bags and taken to the blood bank in Vancouver. From there it goes to the laboratory where it's checked for anti-bodies and for diseases like hepatitis and malaria.

"The safest blood in the world comes out of a Canadian blood bank," he points out, adding that a 1971 report in the United States (where, of course, many people sell rather than donate their blood) said a patient undergoing open-heart surgery and requiring a transfusion had a 51-per-cent chance of getting hepatitis.

"Last year in B.C., there were 35,000 patients who received blood transfusions and there were only five cases of hepatitis," says Gerry, "and no one's even sure that those were related to the transfusions."

After being tested, the blood goes into cold storage and from there it's distributed to every hospital in the province.

There are four main blood groups, says Gerry, and most people are Group O. Of those, most are O Positive and the rest are either negative or positive strains of Groups A, B and AB. But there are also at least 190 rare blood groups in storage at the bank.

★ ★ ★

"One group is so rare that there are believed to be only two people in Canada who have it—and they are brother and sister," says Gerry.

As well as the blood bank, hospitals here can also call on people on the Red Cross' list of about 200 emergency donors.

But, although you may give blood free, the costs involved to the transfusion service are rising all the time.

In 1973, the cost of collecting, processing and shipping one pint (actually, it's not quite a pint but 450 cc., insists Gerry) of blood was $10.70. And the projected cost for this year: $30 a pint!

Coupled with these increased costs, the B.C. and Yukon Division of the Red Cross has had it's budget cut considerably. (What hasn't?). And now, instead of the former custom of sending out cards reminding regular donors of the coming clinics, Gerry has a number of women volunteers going through the list and phoning everyone.

"With higher costs and budget cuts, there's only one way out: I've got to get more donors into fewer clinics," explains Gerry. "This helps make the cost per-pint much lower.

"That's the aim of the game—to collect your maximum amount of blood in the minimum amount of time. If we don't make it, then the teams come off the road. And then we won't have blood at all. I refuse to contemplate after that—it just can't happen."

To keep the blood transfusion service in operation, some 2,500 pints have to be donated each week in B.C. That's where the projected target bit comes in as the Red Cross knows what each area will need and what the donors in that area, hopefully, are willing to give.

"Last year, we collected 400 points more than we used in the two hospitals in Victoria," says Gerry. "But that's the first time in at least 20 years that the Lower Island has collected enough blood to support its own hospitals. Before that, we were a kept city."

The supervisor is confident people here will continue to increase their support. The service has operated since its foundation in 1947 despite the fact that less than five per cent of Canadians are blood donors.

But your blood, is indeed, "the gift of life."

"Science has made leaps and bounds in surgery," says Gerry. "Science can do a lot of things, but it can't make blood.

Hotel Fears Harborside Huckstering

By PAUL MOSS

Times Staff

Empress Hotel manager Ted Balderson has expressed concern to Victoria city council about a possible renewal of "huckstering" on the Causeway by tour bus operators.

His letter to council makes no mention of Marguerite Tours Ltd., the new company which plans to operate four streetcar-type buses in competition with several government-owned bus lines. But it is clearly a broadside aimed at the venture involving ex-MLAs Jim Gorst and Gordon Dowding.

Balderson points out that the Empress spends a great deal of moey to attract visitors to Victoria, adding: "We naturally frown on excessive noise on the Causeway and are particularly upset when our guests complain of being pestered by sightseeing and attraction hucksters."

He says the problem was eliminated in 1974 (when the last privately-owned companies were brought up by the government). And last year, in his first year as manager, he found the Gray Line operations and the double-decker buses "aesthetically compatible with our facilities."

But Balderson argues that all concerned should be trying to make Victoria's tourist industry a year-round industry. Gray Line has co-operated fully with the Empress in this respect, he says, but he cannot become enthusiastic about "operators who move in for the choice summer season to take the 'cream' off the top."

His letter concludes: "I respect the decisions of city council but would like to recommend, on behalf of the Empress Hotel, that additional sightseeing conveyances not be allowed to display and sell their services on the Causeway."

The only "additional" tour buses expected to be operating in the area this summer are the mock-trolleys of Marguerite Tours.

Gorst said earlier this week the company was only about 10 days away from launching the business.

City council took the view recently that it has no legal grounds to prevent the company from using the Causeway while at the same time it allows the government's companies to park there.

But Mayor Mike Young warned Gorst and Dowding that if there is any trouble from aggressive competition between private enterprise and government, all the vehicles will be removed.

What Fire? About Turn!

Where's the fire, a Saanich family wondered, drawn outside their home to see what all the sirens were about Friday afternoon.

"Look behind you," they were told by assistant fire chief Cliff Button who had just roared up their driveway in a department car. "Your roof's on fire."

Firefighters on the following trucks quickly extinguished the blaze at the home of Fred Jordan, 4183 Douglas, confining the fire to a small section of the roof.

Button said sparks from a fireplace started the fire which burned about a four-foot section of roof and attic causing a few hundred dollars damage to the older frame house.

The fire was reported by a caller several blocks away who told the departent she saw smoke coming from the roof of a house and "it didn't look right."

Button said he didn't have an exact address, but he quickly found the burning house and the surprised family.

Leaf Miner Hits Victoria

Widespread damage to Victoria's ornamental conifers by the cypress leaf miner—an insect which bores holes in needles of the evergreen trees—is reported by provincial entomologists.

Chet Neilson said the infestation has been building up in the past two years and seems to be nearing its peak this spring.

"I've received a lot of complaints," he said. "The pests are mainly attacking two species—Thuja and chamaecyparis."

The insect in June is a moth and lays its eggs on the needles of trees which later in the season hatch out into tiny worms and start feeding on the conifers.

The Potlatch Is a Kacklam

The organizer of an ongoing Indian festival at the Esquimalt reserve has bowed to the wishes of Indians to drop the name of "potlatch" for his native dance show.

Al Poelzer of Kitimat, said the name of his dance festival held in the Esquimalt reserve longhouse has been changed to Kacklam — meaning coming out feast or festival.

The dance festival is to be held continuously through the summer.

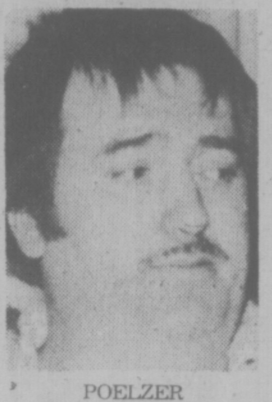
Margaret Vickers of Kitkatla, a Tsimshian, who is Vancouver Island chairman of the B.C. Native Teachers Association, said she saw the performance and agrees it is not a potlatch.

She explained a potlatch is given for a specific reason, such as a marriage, a memorial or to pass on names and traditions to a member of a family.



POELZER
. . . he's un-Indian

"All invited persons to a potlatch receive gifts," she said. "The people are fed by the host and, of course, are not required to pay."

She said at the Esquimalt festival people had to pay for admission and for food.

"I have been receiving phone calls from members of the school board, local teachers and professors at the University of Victoria, asking me to comment on the authenticity of the potlatch," she said.

"All I can say it is not authentic," she said. "I was upset when I saw the dances. They were not performed in the traditional manner."

She said she was among a group who met Poelzer to discuss the matter of using the name potlatch.

"He admitted not being Indian, but married to a Tsimshian from Kitimat, she said. "He said he has been living so long among us that he considered himself an Indian."

"Well, I have no quarrel with him about that," she said. "I don't care if a non-Indian organizes Indian dances, as long as they are done properly in the traditional manner."

VICKERS
. . . she got calls

Poelzer admitted meeting an Indian group but declined to name the individuals.

"But I wish those Kwakiutl Indians from Alert Bay would mind their own business," he said.

By PAT DUFOUR

Times Staff

A 65-unit apartment building for senior citizens is planned for the former Oakland Industries Ltd. site at 1302-1306 Wharf Street.

The project is being planned by developer Hans Hartwig, who purchased the ½-acre waterfront property near the Johnson Street bridge two weeks ago.

Hartwig declined to name the price.

He says the apartments will be one-bedroom, each having a balcony, most of them facing onto the harbor.

They will be rental units, costing somewhere between $200 and $250 a month.

The plans, which are now before the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for approval, include an open-air plaza fronting on Wharf.

Because of the sloping terrain the non-combustible building will be five storeys on the harbor side and four storeys on the Wharf Street side.

The height of the building on Wharf will be a maximum of 40 feet, well within the zoning requirements for Inner Harbor development, Hartwig said.

An application has been made to demolish the buildings on the site, one of which is designated heritage.

The building however, is in a sorry state.

The fish cannery company vacated the Wharf Street premises Jan. 15, 1975 to move to its new Montreal Street complex. Mortar has dropped from the bricks and the interior has borne the brunt of fires and other acts of vandalism.

Hartwig said the heritage building, which encroaches on five feet of city sidewalk, has been declared unsafe by city inspectors.

Hartwig, whose other projects include Nootka Court and Hartwig Court, said it is essential that living accommodation be increased in the downtown core of the city.

"We are faced with a lack of parking. There must be more residential in the downtown area that will not need parking," he said. "The whole Market Square, as an example, will be a failure unless there is some redevelopment."

Providing he gets CMHC and city approval, Hartwig expects work to get under way in about six weeks with the project due to be completed some time next spring.

Sewer Trouble 'Real Hazard'

Faulty sewage disposal systems in some houses near Esquimalt Lagoon are continuing to produce a health hazard which is "very real," the regional health officer said Friday.

Although the problem has continued for about two years, no quick solution is in sight.

Dr. Allan Arneil said he would like to start work right away on about 20 of the worst systems. Tests have recently shown far more viruses than previously suspected. In some homes, effluent is running over driveway and onto the roads.

Homes in the subdivision, which was developed by Block Bros., use chromoglass disposal systems, which involve agitating effluent and pumping it into dispersal fields.

Correcting the individual faulty systems might prove simply a short-term soltuion so Arneil is recommending a sewage collection system to serve the 68 houses.

If 50 percent of residents sign a petition requesting it, the regional board can install a collection system, possibly getting a start by August.

Isherwood Denies Business Link With Golf Plan

Joe Isherwood, part owner of the Royal Oak Inn, disclaimed Friday any financial interest in a proposal to lease 153 acres of Beaver Lake parkland to make an 18-hole golf course.

The proposal was made by Vancouver golf architect Ernest E. Brown to the parks committee of the Capital Region board Wednesday.

Isherwood in June of 1974 is quoted as saying his company planned a nine-hole golf course, as large or perhaps larger than Ardmore, as well as three covered tennis courts.

The Royal Oak Inn is situated adjacent to Beaver Lake Park.

Isherwood said the company's plan for a golf course is not connected or associated with the new proposal.

"We were planning to build the golf course on our own lands," he explained. "But we have now waived aside this project in view of this new proposal."

He added he is completely in favor of using Beaver Lake parkland for the development of a golf course.

"The regional district has done nothing with the land," he said. "It's a disgrace."

Isherwood, however, expressed douhts a golf course would pay if the land was leased to a private company.

"It seems to me it would be more likely to pay if it was a public golf course," he said.

THREE YOUTHS HELD IN BLUEJEANS HAUL

Saanich police arrested three Ottawa teenagers in connection with the theft Thursday of $1,100 worth of blue jeans from Scorpion Young Men's fashions at the Town and Country shopping centre.

The three are expected to appear in provincial court Monday.

Two cartons containing 55 pairs of the pants were stolen from behind the store while a staff member was momentarily inside unpacking the rest of the shipment.

High Canadian Labor Bill Pushes Firms Into U.S.

CALGARY (CP) — Many companies in Canada's western provinces have been forced by high labor costs to try to set up manufacturing operations in the western United States, says Bill Reiff, president of Acme Personnel Service.

Reiff, whose company has 110 offices in North America, said he was told by one Canadian manufacturer that the minimum wage for his unskilled laborers was $8.50 an hour and he could hire someone in the state of Washington to do the same job for $3 an hour.

"Wage increases in western Canada over the last three years have been double the wage increases in the western states," said Reiff.

As an example of the disparities, he said, a legal secretary in Calgary is hard to find for $850 a month while in the western United States, a qualified person would "jump at the job" for $600 a month.

In addition, he said, a house selling for $50,000 in Calgary would probably sell in Spokane, Wash., about 150 miles south of the Canada-U.S. border, for $28,000.

Reiff said Canadians who live close to the U.S. border, especially citizens of British Columbia, buy much of their food in the United States.

"You'll drive 100 miles on a weekend to buy food there, pay duty and still save money," said Reiff.

"In Vancouver, a box boy at a food store makes $15,000 a year. Imagine what that does to the price of food. And nearby U.S. grocers have a hard time keeping enough food on their shelves as a result of this."

Reiff was sharply critical of minimum-wage laws in both countries. In Canada the minimum wage now is $3 an hour.

"I believe minimum wage is the most devastating social legislative factor in the world," he said, stating that the minimum wage in the United States increased in January to $2.30 an hour from $2.10 an hour and as a result, 300,000 unskilled jobs were eliminated by automation.

He said unemployment among teens in the United States is more than 20 per cent and as high as 60 per cent in the black community, and warned if the minimum level continues to rise, there will be a generation of people 20 to 30 who have never had a job by the time the 1980s arrive.

"If we have a generation of people with families who have never had a job, we will have a social problem that will be incredible.

"If a person hasn't learned to work by the age of 25, he will be on welfare for the rest of his life."

Reiff has suggested the federal government should allow employers — who say they can't afford to pay unskilled workers minimum wages to give them on-the-job training as was done in previous years — to pay unskilled workers an entry wage level of about two-thirds the minimum level for a period of six months to give newcomers a chance to work.

"Young people want an opportunity to work. Many of them are living at home anyway, so they are more concerned with obtaining experience than in making a living wage right away."

He also said he would like to see a moratorium on minimum-wage increases for 10 years.

He said that if nothing is done, the problem created by minimum-wage levels will be "unsolvable" within 10 years.

Police Check Balfour Files

VANCOUVER (CP) — George Levy, a director of Balfour Mining Ltd., said Friday the company's directors were "completely in the dark" as to the reason for a police investigation into trading in Balfour's shares.

Trading in Balfour stock was suspended Thursday morning by the Vancouver Stock Exchange after more than 100,000 shares had changed hands in the first half-hour of the day's session. The price dropped from 92 cents to 45 cents.

During the morning, Balfour's office here and the offices in Toronto of a company known as 80195 Canada Ltd. and of promoter Norton Cooper were searched and certain records were seized by the RCMP.

Levy said in an interview that under a financing agreement concluded early in May, Balfour issued to 80195 Canada $240,000 of nine per cent convertible debentures. The debentures are convertible into Balfour Shares at a price of 60 cents per share and there has been no conversion yet, he said.

Subject to approval of shareholders at a meeting on June 25, he said, 80195 Canada will also be issued a warrant to purchase 400,000 shares of Balfour at 90 cents a share.

Levy said the financing deal was accepted by the British Columbia superintendent of Brokers and the VSE.

"My complaint," said Levy in talking about the police search, "is that the warrant was dated June 8, but the search was not carried out until June 10.

"It's pretty obvious that someone other than the authorities knew what was going to happen ahead or time."

Balfour is drilling a silver-lead-zinc prospect on the Cassiar area of northern B.C. the first drill hole has been completed and assay results from two core lengths should be available soon, Levy said.

Both Sides Braced in Construction Pact Row

Desultory talks toward settling new B.C. construction industry contracts so far have been unaffected by the taking of strike and lockout votes by unions and employers.

But the bargaining climate may heat up with the result of a carpenters' union strike ballot being completed this weekend and due to be counted Monday in Vancouver.

Carpenters comprise nearly half of the 40,000 building industry tradesmen represented through B.C. and Yukon Building Trades Council, which bargains with Construction Labor Relations Association representing 850 employers. There are 21 unions involving 65 separate agreements.

Cy Stairs, president of the building trades council, said little had been produced so far in negotiations and strike votes were being taken "for pressure."

Similarly, employers had been taking lockout votes.

A carpenter official on Vancouver Island said his union was expecting 80-90 per cent support of strike action from the membership.

But Stairs said there was "no common purpose in the trades," which impedes negotiating progress.

Last week CLRA offered all unions an 8 per cent wage increase in a one-year contract, apparently guided by federal anti-inflation rules.

Three unions — cement masons, insulators and plumbers and pipefitters — have served strike notice, but the Employers' Council of B.C. said they indicated they would not necessarily take strike action.

LET THERE BE LIGHT

Your telephone rings. It is your REALTOR saying that he is coming right over with a prospect. You hang up the phone. What's the next thing you do? Turn on every light in the house! Why?

Because you want to give the prospect the best image you can of the comfort, beauty and liveability you are offering. In other words, you want to sell a home not a house. And full illumination is the best way to give your home that "lived-in" look. Furniture and rugs and fixtures take on a warm glow from the proper lighting. Here are a few "bright" ideas:

Turn on every lamp in the living room, bedrooms and family room Be careful about turning on the overhead lights in these rooms for it could be harsh and make the room look uninviting. Turn on every light in a storage room or closet. Go all out in illuminating the kitchen — the cheerier the better. Brighten up the bathroom too — but carefully choose the right wattage for bulbs by the mirror, pick the most flattering one. Remember, it's just as important to have lights on in the afternoon as it is for a night-time showing.

Plastic Wrist Brings Relief To Crippled Arthritis Victims

CHICAGO (UPI) — A new plastic and metal wrist joint may help chronic arthritis sufferers use once crippled hands that were unable to perform even the simplest tasks.

Dr. Robert Volz, an orthopedic surgeon with the University of Arizona college of medicine in Tucson, told the Arthritis Foundations' annual meeting Friday that he and his associates have developed and successfully used an artificial wrist joint on more than 50 patients.

In recent years, doctors have developed workable artificial replacements for most major joints destroyed by arthritis. But until now, there has been no substitute for the wrist joint — vital for even minor hand movements.

"Arthritis patients who have lost wrist mobility don't have enough strength and stability for grasping," Volz said in remarks prepared for today's meeting. "Fine motor control of the hands is also lost."

Volz said he developed the "total wrist" implant in 1973, replacing damaged wrist joints with a metal-plastic device that provides a smooth, gliding wrist motion similar to that of a healthy wrist joint.

He said the patients experienced total pain relief and gained better functional use of the hand and fingers. He also said visible deformities caused by the disease were reduced.

Volz said the success of the operation was reflected by requests from patients who had one wrist replaced to have a second implant for the other wrist.

The new joint, he said, enabled the patients to again button buttons, zip zippers, sign cheques, lift heavy objects and tend to their personal hygiene without aid.

"Until recently, there was little we could do for most of these patients," he said. "We restructured a few wrists, surgically, and occasionally resorted to fusion, but the results were not very satisfactory."

Workers Resist Union

MONTREAL (CP) — A bid to unionize thousands of clerical and middle-management workers of Canadian National Railways is being resisted by many of the employees themselves.

A spokesman for the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers confirmed that the union has asked the Canadian Labor Relations Board to certify it as bargaining agent for an estimated 2,000 additional CNR employees.

He said the workers were inadvertently left off the list when the union was granted certification to represent 17,600 CNR employees in 1962.

Many of the workers, fearing they will lose company benefits, are opposing the application. They have written letters and signed petitions to send to their MPs and the Labor Relations Board.

Dialing a Number Tough in Bangkok

By DAVID A. ANDELMAN
New York Times

BANGKOK — 'Have they changed all the phone numbers in Bangkok yet?''

Jokes such as that, which contain perhaps more truth than humor, are what happens when, in a city of four million people — where the phones never really worked to begin with — every telephone number is suddenly changed in the dead of night.

Bangkok is and always has been one of the world's telephone disaster areas — a city where, so the saying goes, half the cars on the street are taking messages to the owners of the other half who in turn are replying to still a third set of messages.

More often than not, dialing a number that is three blocks away gets the caller the strains of a Chinese opera rather than a ringing signal.

Long ago, the Telephone Organization of Thailand stopped replacing phones that were reported broken, telling customers they had to go out and buy their own new phones. Over the years, as the phone system became increasingly snarled, increasingly frustrating, more and more customers took their phones and smashed them. It was bankrupting the phone company. — Finally the phone company decided at least to try to do something about all this. Last fall, when the new telephone directories came out, subscribers found a big change.

Every telephone number was new. Instead of the five and six-digit phone numbers that were a mosaic across Bangkok, every telephone had the up-to-date Western style of seven digits. There was a notation in the front of the book that said: "All telephone numbers in the Bangkok metropolitan area will change from 5 and 6 digit numbers to 7-digit numbers after public announcement by Telephone Organization of Thailand (approx. April 1976.)''

Finally, between April 25 and 26, the change came.

'While most have been spitting tacks, tearing their hair and uttering unrepeatable oaths to poor telephone operators, who as a body seem ready to commit harakiri with their own telephone plugs at the next abortive connection, I've been sitting back savoring the delights of heavenly blissful silence,'' Heather Miller, women's editor of the Bangkok Post, wrote in her weekly diary.

"I find that already I'm feeling much healthier. My cigarette intake has dropped because I don't have to spend unbelievable frustrating hours on the telephone trying to make contact with the outside world. I'm unobtainable, incommunicado and I hope it continues forever.''

The new, seven-digit system was designed to increase the available telephone lines from about 200,000 to a potential 8 million. That would be more than enough to serve even New York City's code-212 metropolitan area. It would be far more than Bangkok would ever need.

Yet in Bangkok all seems myth. No new exchange centers or lines have been installed. Many areas of the city, particularly the old town on by the Chao Phya River, now the commercial center, still subsist on a system installed more than 20 years ago when Bangkok was comparatively small, rural and provincial.

The ancient lines, eroded by decades of rainy seasons and floods, mingle and cross with the lines that carry closed-circuit radio to the Chinese commercial community in old Bangkok, and with lines leading to the Chinese opera, which finds its way into many conversations or would-be conversations.

"How many lines does that happen on?'' said Sa Nao, a Telephone Organization official ;"less than a million? Then it's not so bad.''

Wrong Man Shot

ASUNCION, Paraguay (Reuter) — Police said Friday a Croatian carpenter has admitted killing Uruguayan Ambassador Carlos Abdala when he mistook him for the Yugoslav envoy. Joze Damfanovic said he meant to shoot Yugoslav Ambassador Mancilo Vucekovic on Monday.

FM Licences Granted Alberta, Sask.

OTTAWA (CP) — The Canadian Radio-television and Tele-communications Commission said Friday it has granted the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. six new FM radio services in Saskatchewan, Alberta and the Northwest Territories.

Licences expiring in 1980 will allow the CBC to open English-language FM stations in Regina to carry the national FM network and in Fond du Lac and Stony Rapids to carry the AM network.

Two licences expiring in 1978 for Lethbridge will enable the CBC to carry the French language AM network and the English AM and FM networks.

A licence expiring in 1989 for Port Radium, N.W.T., will allow the rebroadcasting of the CBC English AM network from Yellowknife.

College Overruns Campus

THE PAS, Man. (CP) — "What I find most exciting about this college is that it's always breaking out of the confines of its concrete campus and reaching out to communities of the north,'' says Lois Britton, Keewatin Community College's new principal.

"At Keewatin we are really bursting at the seams,'' she said. "There are 525 students on campus taking full-time courses and 75 in evening classes.''

But off campus, more than 1,000 students are taking satellite evening and adult courses in 30 communities from Gran Rapids and Easterville in the southern part of the region to Pukatawagan and Churchill in the north.

The college gives a miner's apprenticeship course in Thompson and in Flin Flon, added by the participation of all northern Manitoba mining companies and unions.

A small motor maintenance and repair course, tailored for fishermen, trappers and others living in remote communities, is given at Cranberry Portage.

At the community level, Ms. Britton said, the college works through local co-ordinators who are able to interpret what the people want and are often able to find local people qualified to teach the courses.

Ms. Britton said extending the college to the community is more important than adding new buildings.

"A community college is different from a university or any other post-secondary institution where you can more or less set your own course. Here you are responsible to governments. In a sense you are a training arm of government.''

DAVE MICK

Three-Time Winner Three Shots in Front

VANCOUVER (CP) — Doug Roxburgh of Vancouver Point Grey was the only player able to master par Friday and forged into a three-stroke lead going into the final round today of the British Columbia Amateur golf championship.

Roxburgh, seeking his fourth B.C. title, carded a two-under 70 at the long, wet Point Grey Golf and Country Club course for a 54-hole total of 214, two under par.

Tied for second at 217 were Don Griffiths of the host course and a pair of Victoria players, Cec Ferguson and Dave Mick.

Mick and Griffiths, who shared the halfway lead with 141 totals, both shot 76 in the third round, while Ferguson finished with two birdies for a 73.

Another three strokes back in fifth place were three Vancouver area players — Kelly Murray, Pip Steele and Lee Swope — at 220.

Only four players managed to break 75 on the 6,508-yard course — Roxburgh, Ferguson, Murray and two-time champion John Russell of the host club. Russell had a 74 for a 222 total.

Doug Stewart of Vancouver started the third round one stroke behind the co-leaders, but skied to an 82. Kevin Mulhern, another Point Grey member, fell seven strokes off the pace by taking a 77. He started the day at even par.

Roxburgh, who lost the title on the first hole of a sudden-death playoff against Marine Drive-clubmate Jim Nelford last year, had four birdies and two bogies in his round Friday.

Nelford couldn't defend the title because he's competing for Brigham Young University in this week's NCAA championships.

Third-round play cut the field to the top 30 scorers and ties, and 31 made it into today's final round with an 11-over-par 227 the cutoff score.

Six Island golfers earned the right to play the final round and stay in contention for a bid to the 36-hole Invitational tournament which is the final test used in the selection of the B.C. team for the Willingdon Cup matches.

WILLEY'S CLAIM 'NOT FRIVOLOUS' —JUDGE ORDERS REINSTATEMENT

VANCOUVER (CP) — Two professional golf associations were ordered by a supreme court judge Friday to restore golf professional Ronald Lawrence Willey of Vancouver to their membership after they suspended him for allegedly breaking an advertising rule.

Willey had sued the Canadian Professional Golfers' Association of British Columbia and the Canadian Professional Golfers' Association for damages on claims of a conspiracy to injure him by suspending him from the CPGA.

He claimed they sought to injure him by reprimanding him for advertising the sale of golf equipment in a manner which purportedly violates the bylaws of that association, and by alleged concerted action to disrupt his supply of golf equipment.

Mr. Justice Kirke Smith held that Willey was entitled to an injunction that requires that he be restored to membership with all its rights and privileges pending the trial of his damage action.

He said that Willey's claim is not frivolous and that there are serious questions to be tried.

"The serious questions to be tried involve, among other things, the interpretation of what I consider the obscurely-worded bylaws of the two defendant associations, the question as to whether certain of those bylaws do or do not offend the Combines Investigation Act, and the legality of the arrangements which allegedly exist in tacit, if not expressed form, between the major manufacturers and suppliers of golfing equipment and the Canadian Professional Golfers' Association", said Mr. Justice Smith.

McDonalds Pull Away From Rivals

NEW WESTMINSTER — Victoria McDonalds, continuing to display a dynamic offense, have some breathing room atop the Western Canada Major Junior Lacrosse League standing today.

The Bill Munroe-coached Bakers padded their first-place lead to five points by clipping New Westminster Salmonbellies 18-14 in a crucial meeting at Queen's Park Arena Friday.

Westminster and Burnaby Cablevision, co-tenants of the No. 2 spot, now trail McDonalds by five points but both mainland teams have two games in hand.

Macs, opening strongly, took command early. They led 7-2 after the first period and 13-5 after the second.

Victoria dressed only 16 players, including a pair of recruits brought up from the Esquimalt junior "B" team. Both helped the cause. Gary Cadwallader and Doug Angrove, who helped fill in for regulars unable to make the trip because of work committments, both scored twice.

But, as always, it was the one-two scoring combination of Kevin Alexander and captain Bob Cool which provided Victoria's main offensive spark.

Alexander ran his league-leading point total to 97 with five goals and three assists. With 16 games remaining, Alexander is well ahead of the pace of last year when he set a national junior scoring record with 207 points.

The cool one scored twice and set up three scoring shots to extend his point total to 81.

New Westminster goalie Jim Poelzer, unable to stop Victoria's highly-geared attack, tried to spark Bellies with a show of offensive power. He scored one goal and threw passes for six other scoring thrusts.

New Westminster made it look closer than it was by scoring four shorthanded goals in the final three minutes.

Olympics: Some Books To Help the Viewers

Remember the hawker's cry at the ballpark? ... "You can't tell the players without a program ... the name ... number ... and position ..."

You know the pitch. And with the Olympic Games coming up at Montreal this summer (July 17-August 1) you'll need to have yocr handy guide handy whether you'll be watching the big event on site or at home on the wide screen.

Viewing the Olympics is perhaps a little more complicated than just merely watching another sports event. This is especially so from a North American viewpoint, oriented as we are to mostly professional sport. And to fully understand all the 21 disciplines (sports) of the Olympics is a task often beyond the reach of most experts, except in their chosen fields.

Think not? Well, quick now, what are the five components of the modern pentathlon? What is the size of a handball? In fencing what is the difference between the foil, epee and sabre? Or, in weightlifting, does everyone out there really understand the snatch, clean and jerk?

There are several books out on the subject of the Olympics, and there will be more, but one that hits home with this observer is the publication How to Watch Olympic Games Summer 1976.

* * *

Basically it is a fundamental history of all Olympic sports and if it won't give you the names of the competitors, it will give you most of the rest — the whens, the wheres and the whys. The athletes will have to earn their own starting and starring roles.

There is more than enough in it to satisfy the average fan and, if it may be over-simplified in some instances to the expert, he may learn something.

There is a chapter on every sport, and each chapter contains a history of that sport, qualifying procedures to get to the Olympics, rules, past performances, you name it.

In addition, for each sport there is a "watching tip." For example, in boxing which, in the Olympics "is a sport not to be confused with fighting" . . . one tip is . . . "to score offensively a blow must be landed with a clenched fist, nullifying, for example, 'flea-flicker' jabs with the end of an opened glove."

These tips provide a lay introduction to some of the basics of the sport. There are other vignettes too — such as "competitors may compete in bare feet or with shoes on one or both feet ... over the years swimming records have improved an average of 31 per cent . . . and in wrestling a contestant is not allowed to wear a beard or a mustache unless it is several months old."

I didn't know that or a number of other Olympic facts either.

But that's what this guide is all about. It's understandable, readable, and, at $6.95 isn't too pricy.

* * *

If there is a better guide (or book) on the market it could very definitely be "Olympic Sports." This is an excellent hard-cover production with all the extra features, pictures and background expected for the extra price. It's a home-library supplement, for sure. But it also sells for $24.50 and may be over-priced in relation to others.

Still, if you can afford it and that's your inclination then by all means buy it. It's well done and you'll enjoy it.

There's yet another booklet and it has a special appeal because it is the hip-pocket or jacket size handbook style. It is also the "Official Guide" of the Organizing Committee of the Olympic Games, and contains advertising which has helped to lower the price to modest proportions. Like the others, it is replete with pertinent background information and special features on each sport to help the viewer better understand the spectacle. (And it sits on the desk here at the office as a quick, handy reference, which it is). There is even room set aside for this year's winners in each event to be inscribed alongside the record holders of the past. And that, in a booklet, is being considerate.

At $3.50 it should sell well, and probably will.

But to each his own, or did you know that all that glitters is not necessarily gold? That's right and even in the Olympics. Because actually the Olympic gold medals are struck from a silver base with a gold spray added; the silver medals are the same composition as the gold without the spray; and the bronze — why they're bronze, silly!

Rookie Can't Figure What's Happening

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Tom Purtzer, the surprising rookie who led through three rounds of the Bicentennial tournament last week, gained a share of the top spot Friday with a four-under-par 68 that tied him with hard-hitting Jim Dent for the 36-hole lead in the weather-troubled, $250,000 Kemper Open golf tournament.

"I really don't understand it," said Purtzer, a 24-year-old Arizona State product who hadn't even challenged before his sudden rush to the top last week. "I don't know what's happening. I wish I did. I really wish I did. I've just got everything going. I'm feeling good and I'm putting good.

But a flock of tour-toughened challengers, all of whom have been in the chase much more often than Purtzer, are in position to make a move.

"I'm putting good," warned Dent, who shared the lead at 136, eight under par on the Quail Hollow Country Club course. The one-time caddy at the Augusta National Golf Club reached two par fives in two and didn't make a bogey on his way to a second-round 68.

"I'm playing very, very well," said Ray Floyd, the Masters champion and defending title-holder here. He shot a second-round 67 that put him just four back at 140.

"I'm playing much better than I did at Dallas (where he won)," said Mark Hayes. "I'm very excited about the last two rounds.

Hayes, who had a second-round 69, was one of three tied at 138, just two shots off the pace. Also at that figure were former Masters champion Charles Coody, with a 70, and Gary Groh, with a 69.

The group at 139 included Mason Rudolph, Homero Blancas, Lon Hinkle, Joe Inman and Roger Maltbie.

Hinkle, along with Dent, was, among the 75 players stranded on the course by a Thursday thunderstorm. They had to return early Friday morning to complete their first round. And Hinkle did it with a 29 on the back side that gave him a 65 for the round. He shot 74 in the second round. Blancas had a 67, Rudolph 73, Inman and Maltbie 69s in hot, humid, hazy weather.

Combos, Boxers Light Up With Power at the Plate

GSV Combos and London Boxing Club pushed run-scoring buttons to score easy victories Friday in the opening games of the Victoria Senior Women's Softball League's Barbara Payne Memorial tournament.

Carol Newcombe came up with a strong pitching performance and got plenty of support as Combos defeated CJVI Vicettes 11-1 while Boxers downed MacDonald's Furniture 12-7.

Jeanna Underwood took credit for Boxing Club's victory while catcher Carol McDonaugh supplied the batting spark with a three-for-three performance.

An upset highlighted the start of action in a 12-team men's tournament staged by the Macdonald Park League.

Colwood Labatts scored an eyebrow-raising 9-4 victory over Castle Properties of the Heywood League while Remco Office drubbed Mayfair Properties 11-1 in a game called after five innings.

Shift Now Official

EDMONTON (CP) — Edmonton Oil Kings of the Western Canada Hockey League are moving to Portland, Ore., where the team will be known as Portland Winter Hawks, Brian Shaw, Oil Kings' president and general manager, said Friday.

Ed Chynoweth, WCHL president who was in Portland with Shaw, confirmed the move in a telephone interview. Chynoweth added there is no chance another WCHL team will play in Edmonton next season.

"The league would look pretty foolish if it let one club leave the city in June and moved another one in right now," he said.

Lewis Provides Spark As T-Men Gain Ground

NANAIMO — Nanaimo Timbermen, thanks to goaltender John Lewis, are "looking serious" about their bid to crash the Western Lacrosse Association playoffs.

In their second season since returning to senior lacrosse after an absence of several years, the Timbermen pulled into third place Friday by defeating Coquitlam Adanacs 15-13.

But the evening wasn't one of entire sweetness. Only about 500 fans — a disappointing turnout — witnessed Nanaimo's first home game of the season. Timbermen were forced to play their first five home games at Port Alberni because of a civic worker's strike that forced closure of Nanaimo's arenas.

But the fans on hand had to be delighted with Lewis. He turned in a sparkling display, blocking 50 shots to keep T-Men on top all the way.

Nanaimo led 8-4 and 12-9 after the first two periods despite being out-shot 63-52 by Adanacs.

Holdover Wayne Sutherland was Nanaimo's Mr. Big on attack. He enjoyed a seven-point night, including three goals.

Seniors Leaders Get Helping Hand

Victoria Golf Club players lost their first match of the season but maintained their grip on first place in the Vancouver Island Seniors Golf League because of assistance by Glen Meadows.

Oak Bay was beaten 3½-2½ at Royal Colwood but remained in the lead as Glen Meadows tied second-place Gorge Vale 3-3.

Cedar Hill made the big gain in Friday's matches. Cedar Hill scored a 6-0 sweep over Uplands and moved into third place.

It's in Book, or Is It?

By The Associated Press

There was confusion galore in an American League baseball game Friday night, and all because a ball became lodged in a catcher's chest protector.

An eighth-inning pitch thrown by Oakland A's reliever Paul Lindblad bounced in front of the plate, caromed off catcher Tim Hosley's throat and lodged in the backstop's chest protector, with Milwaukee Brewers' Sixto Lezcano on third base and the score 3-2 in the Brewers' favor.

"Time," said plate umpire Dave Phillips, waving Lezcano home for a reason apparently still unknown to A's manager Chuck Tanner, Oakland owner Charlie Finley and catcher Hosley.

"I know you can't win a protest over an umpire's judgement, but you can win a protest if their decision is not in the rule book," said Tanner after the Brewers—with the unusual insurance run—scored a 4-2 victory.

"We talked to the umpires and asked them to show the rule to us in the book and they can't find, it," sail Finely.

First base umpire Rich Garcia, who first called the mystery rule to Phillips' attention, said that when a ball is lost, runners are awarded one base apiece.

That was his version.

"When the ball goes out of sight like that one did, the play is dead—the runners advance," said umpire Bill Kunkel. "It's like playing on a muddy field. What happens if the ball hits the mud and disappears in it? It's the same thing."

That was his version.

"The rule says that any time a ball is caught in a catcher's equipment, it's one base," said Hosley in a questioning tone. "If the rule says that, true enough. But I can't see it."

That's his version.

The final version may be that of American League president Lee MacPhail, since Tanner said: "If the rule book says that, fine. But if they can't come up with the rule by tomorrow ((Saturday), I'm going to ask Charlie Finley to call MacPhail to see if the game can be resumed from that point. After all, one game can win or lose a pennant."

In other American League games Friday night, Cleveland Indians edged Chicago White Sox 5-4 in 13 innings, New York Yankees topped Texas Rangers 7-5, Kansas City Royals blanked Baltimore Orioles 4-0, Minnesota Twins bombed Boston Red Sox 10-4 and Detroit Tigers edged California Angels 4-3.

Player-manager Frank Robinson hit a two-out, two-run pinch home run in the 13th inning to give Cleveland its victory over Chicago.

Steve Garvey of Los Angeles Dodgers was not completely happy with his triple, double and single Friday night in the Dodgers' 7-4 National League victory over Montreal Expos.

"I have never hit for the cycle." Garvey said afterward. "I wasvery aware that I needed a home run, and I was not going to get cheated out of it.

"But all I got was a ground ball."

Canucks Fall To Italians

LEGHORN, Italy (AP) — Italy survived second-half comeback Friday night by Canada to defeat the Canadians, 97-77, in the first round of an international men's basketball tournament. Italy led by 42-36 at half time, but the Canadians rallied to take the lead early in the second half. The Italians, capitalizing on a scoring spree by Della Fiori who topped both teams with 22 points, regained control of the game and won easily in the final minutes.

EXPENSIVE BALL

BOSTON (AP) — The ball used in the crucial fifth game of this year's National Basketball Association championship series has been auctioned off for about 100 times its estimated cost. The basketball, similar to those sold in sporting goods stores for less than $20, was sold to a Wellesley woman for $1,717. Boston Celtics, who won the NBA championship four games to two over Phoenix Suns last weekend, donated the ball used in their triple-overtime, 128-126 victory in game No. 5 to public television station WGBH's annual fund-raising auction. The winning bidder, whose name was not released, said she would give the ball to Celtics forward John Havlicek. She pointed out her bid was Havlicek's number-17-repeated twice.

Lackadaisical Murle Leads by One Shot

TORONTO (CP) — Murle Breer, winless on the Ladies Professional Golf Association tour since 1969, took the first-round lead in a $60,000 tournament Friday — although she didn't have "a lot of desire to be out there."

Mrs. Breer, who joined the tour in 1958, fired a two-under-par 70 in hot, humid weather for a one-stroke lead over Pat Bradley in a bid for the $12,000 first prize in the 54-hole tournament.

Mrs. Breer, 22nd on the LPGA money-winning list with $11,796, said:

"While I was out there I felt as if I didn't know if I wanted to be out there. I felt lackadaisical about my round and thought if I was going to do anything with it I had to get with it. Maybe it was the hot weather."

She finished the front nine with a one-under-par 35 on the 6,095-yard Cedar Brae Golf and Country Club course. She also had a one-under-par 35 on the back nine, including three birdies and two bogeys.

A group of 10 at 72 included defending-champion JoAnne Carner, Judy Rankin, Jane Blalock, Donna Caponi Young, Debbie Austin and Jo Ann Prentice, all winners of several tour events.

Sandra Post of Oakville, Ont., was the top Canadian professional with a 75 including a three-over-par 39 on the back nine. Jocelyne Bourassa of Shawinigan, Que., in her second major tournament in a row after a long layoff due to fatigue, had a 77 while rookie Carol Dawson of Port Hope, Ont., fired an 82.

Marlene Streit of Stoufville, Ont., led a group of eight amateurs with a 76. Valerie White of Vancouver had 77, Pam Johns of Toronto a 78.

The field will be cut to the low 60 and ties after the second round today.

German Club To Test Caps

VANCOUVER (CP) — Vancouver Whitecaps of the North American Soccer League announced Friday they will play an exhibition game here July 27 against West German first-division-champion Borussia Moechengladbach at Empire Stadium.

Whitecaps recently played to ties in exhibition games against Glasgow Rangers of Scotland and Manchester United of England.

Horst Koppel, a Borussia midfielder, currently is being sought by the Whitecaps as a of the NASL season.

Hayman Piloted Five Cup Winners

TORONTO (CP) — Lew Hayman, whose record of coaching five Grey Cup winners has been tied but never exceeded, was honored Friday night at a dinner marking his election to the Football Hall of Fame. More than 100 former players and associates of the 67-year-old Hayman attended the banquet.

Jake Gaudaur, commissioner of the Canadian Football League who played for four teams coached by Hayman — Toronto Argonauts, RCAF Hurricanes, Toronto Indians and Montreal Alouettes, was master of ceremonies.

Hayman, now president of the Argonauts, coached them to the Grey Cup in 1933, the year after he came to Canada from Syracuse, N.Y., in 1937 and 1938.

Hebrides battling to preserve way of life

By PETER KILBORN

STORNOWAY, Outer Hebrides (NYT) — In the fiercely Calvinist churches of these islands, in pubs, where a beer is served with a shot of whiskey, and in the homes, around the fires of sweet-smelling peat, the language they speak is Gaelic.

Most of the 32,000 inhabitants of the Outer Hebrides, off the northwest corner of the Scottish mainland, also speak English and it is just a matter of time, some people here say, before the indigenous Scottish Gaelic will have been harassed from its last stronghold on British soil.

John Murray intends to stop the erosion. After 14 years in Edinburgh and Glasgow, Murray has returned to his home in the tiny farming hamlet of Barvas and an office in Stornoway. His job is to make a language that was the first he learned as a child, the working language of the schools, not just a taught subject, like Latin or French.

He is deeply committed. "We're not to be equated with butterfly collectors," he said. "Gaelic isn't something you do in your spare time. It's a whole world. The sea roars in Gaelic. The birds sing in Gaelic. The dogs bark in Gaelic." Dogs in Gaelic say "ahm" which sounds like "arf."

★ ★ ★

Fish nets line dock in Stornoway harbor

What Murray is doing reflects an emerging phenomenon among cultural minorities in many countries, whether Basques in Spain and France, Estonians in the Soviet Union, or North American Indians, to stand up to the suppression of their own customs and traditions by dominant cultures.

But the Gaels here, as they call themselves, are not prime movers in Scotland's devolution dispute with Britain. They're often boldly independent, but many view the Scottish mainland and its problems with the same suspicion that mainland Scots view England.

Certainly, the Gaelic way of life here is well removed from that of the rest of the British Isles. "There's no class system, not a single sir," said Callum John MacDonald, the local expert on the island's best known export, Harris Tweed.

But he and others here do make note of a sort of caste system. At the bottom are 100 or so inhabitants whose roots, it is thought, go back to the Bronze Age. They are called "tin smiths." Until a few decades ago they were itinerant peddlers, selling kitchen utensils from farm to farm and repairing pots, pans, and milk cans.

★ ★ ★

They are a somewhat isolated minority that tends to intermarry. They have Scottish surnames, primarily MacDonald, MacPhee, Stewart and Drummond, and to an outsider, they look just like everyone else in the Hebrides.

"But we know who they are," said a public official, "by how they walk." Tin smiths, he said, have "a certain swing" to their gait. A taxi driver said he could identify them "by a look in their eye."

Religion, like the social strata, is different here. The anti-establishment, one-time anti-landlord Free Church of Scotland, the "Wee Frees," weighs as heavily on the island's secular life as the Catholic church does in Ireland.

★ ★ ★

There's no music in the country churches and no prayers for the dead as they lay, unembalmed, for two days in their homes before the men of the village — the women stay home — carry them to the burial ground.

"The moment you die," said Alastair Fraser, assistant headmaster of the one high school on the islands, "your fate has been decided. There's no point in praying to get someone to intercede."

Emigration, both to North America and the Scottish mainland, has been a perennial problem. But some people see early signs of abatement.

Murray, 37, one who returned, has been given a $140,000, three-year government grant to restore Gaelic in the primary schools. "What we have in many of the schools now," he said, 'is the foolish situation of Gaelic-speaking children and Gaelic-speaking teachers speaking English to each other."

"The purpose," he said, "isn't to shore up Gaelic. It's sound educational thinking. If a child has come to school with two languages, that means he has had experiences in two languages. If you limit him to one, you're hurting the way he looks at the world."

GENEVA CAFE HOSTED STATESMEN

Old pols knew where to eat

GENEVA (CP) — In a city well supplied with star-rated restaurants, one cafe stands out. For nearly 60 years, diplomats have come to the Bavaria to reconstruct the world—in theory, at least—over good food and wine.

Memories of their days in this international city remain on the walls in caricatures by the Hungarian cartoonists Derso and Kelen.

The caricatures date from 1920, after Woodrow Wilson of the United States, David Lloyd George of Britain, Georges Clemenceau of France and Vittorio Orlando of Italy, meeting in Paris for the post-First World War Treaty of Versailles, designated Geneva as the seat of the future League of Nations.

★ ★ ★

All their images look down on the tables, plus those of the generation that followed. There are Britain's Lord Avon, best known as foreign secretary, Sir Anthony Eden; Sir Harold Macmillan, Eden's successor as prime minister, and Dwight Eisenhower of the United States. A grim Vyacheslav Molotov glares from his frame — but the longtime Soviet foreign minister unbent enough to autograph the cartoon. A wine-filled Nikita Khruschev looks across the room.

★ ★ ★

Most of the between-the-wars political figures look pleasant and well-fed.

But Mme. Andre Neiger, who helps her husband run the restaurant, observed that the current crop of diplomats are more tense than their forebears.

Mme. Neiger, who sat down one night with a couple of Canadian guests to talk in French and share the house wine, was more inclined to discuss food, particularly that from the kitchen of the restaurant her husband's father Adolphe started in 1912. Andre Neiger served an apprenticeship in the celebrated French restaurant, the Cafe de Paris.

She recommended first viande sechee des Grisons—beef sliced paper-thin and air-dried in caves of eastern Switzerland near the headwaters of the Rhine—and jambon cru de l'Engadine—thinly-sliced ham from the eastern Engadine region, home of the one per cent of Swiss who speak the ancient Romansch language.

Then there was perch, fresh from Lake Geneva, filleted and breaded.

Mme. Neiger emphasized that cosmopolitan Geneva is not entirely typical of Swiss cuisine. Other kitchen delights abound in the country.

But one Swiss dish is almost universal. It is bratwurst and rosti — white farmer's sausage made from veal and served with a pie-shaped helping of potatoes, fried on both sides until golden brown.

Stan Delaplane's Tips on Travel

Unspoiled Haiti offers delights

PORT-AU-PRINCE, HAITI —This is mango season and, on every street corner, a black Haitian girl is squatted in front of a half dozen green-and-yellow fruits. Probably the by-products of the family backyard, a scene ready for the artist's paintbrush.

Great baskets of mangoes come down from the bills, carried in head loads by women swinging down the road. The iron market is full of them. They sell everything in the iron market. It's the social centre, the gossip exchange.

There are some small supermarkets in town. But I can't imagine Port-au-Prince without the bustle and the noise, the liveliness of the iron market.

* * *

The mangoes I eat each morning under purple bougainvillea at the Villa Creole are bright orange inside. Almost Chinese red. In Hawaii, I make my children eat mangoes hanging over a bathtub — they're that explosive when you bite into them.

These are juicy. But Haiti has discovered a way of dividing the mango with a knife. Scoring it into bite-size pieces they don't drown you in the squirting juice.

With mangoes, the warm Haiti sun and dark roast coffee, I might never go home again.

Cruise ships have discovered this island in the sun. The ships in the Caribbean sea are as desperate for new harbors as Columbus was. In the best known ports — like St. Thomas — two and three ships shoulder each other for dock room.

Haiti got a dozen ships this year. It jumped the tourist business to more than a quarter of a million.

A cruise line vice-president told me: "Haiti and the Dominican Republic are going to grow faster than anywhere else in the Caribbean next year."

* * *

(French-speaking Haiti and Spanish-speaking Dominica share the island of Hispaniola, the island where Columbus first landed and built the first fort in the new world.)

He said: "We have the ships and the planes and the people traffic. It's certain that Haiti is the place. It's French. It's the only black republic in our part of the world. It's tropical. It's something they've never seen before."

There are no chain hotels. No Hiltons, no Hyatts, no Holiday Inns yet. But there are 2,800 hotel rooms. The best are in Petionville, 1,500 feet in the cooler air above Port-au-Prince.

A first-class double room in the winter runs around $45 a day with breakfast and dinner. And there are good guest houses in town at half and even a third that price.

* * *

So far I've run into four excellent restaurants and there must be a half dozen more. There's a spicy bit of creole in the French cooking. The local escargots — snails stuffed with butter and garlic — are smaller than French escargots. And there's some local herb in it that's delicious.

In the back country they're paving roads. Now they're made for foot and donkey traffic. Fly on the local airline. You're never more than half an hour from where you want to go.

* * *

A brisk new tourist board is watch-dogging the tourist centres. Taxi drivers who met the ships used to work us over unmercifully. Argue extra charges. Now the tourist board is putting in taxi controls. You don't agree with the taxi charge? Take him to the nearest control office.

There's a little light industry: Haiti makes two of every three baseballs in the world. (There's something to shake up your next dinner conversation).

* * *

Most hotels are less than 150 rooms — only 80 where I am at Villa Creole. But the morning waiter knows my name. And Louise, the pretty milk-chocolate barmaid, knows I like two slices of fresh lime in the fragrant Barbancourt rum. You can't buy that in the 1,000-room hotels. And I find I like it — even getting a little spoiled.

Northerners need 'cabin fever' exit

YELLOWKNIFE, N.W.T. (CP) — The soothing strains of Aloha Oe drift out of the Royal Canadian Legion hall into the 20-below temperatures.

Inside, 100 men and women, some in gaudily-flowered Hawaiian shirts and flowing muumuus, let their thoughts slide to Maui, where they will give winter the slip—for another year, anyway.

"Nah," he replies, dismissing the syndrome of depression and irritability associated with the long, dark Arctic winters.

But another patron disagrees. "I think cabin fever is widespread," she says, indicating it is one of the reasons for the popularity of the North of 60 Club's annual charter flight to Hawaii.

"You have to get out. I went to Victoria last year for 10 days and if I hadn't had the break I'd have been shipped out in a cage."

Club manager Dan Billing steers clear of the term cabin fever, but says a holiday in the sun is almost a necessity for people working in the North.

Mental Health officials in the North agree there is a psychological syndrome which appears common during the latter part of the northern winter.

The symptoms are mainly depression and irritability, sometimes resulting in outbursts of anger and behavior which can result in marital breakdown or, in a few extreme cases, suicide.

Jo McQuarry of the Northwest Territories Mental Health Association says contributing factors are not only the long periods of darkness and intense cold but also lack of visual and auditory stimulation.

"In the barren lands, everything is white on white," she explains. "And the silence is deafening. It's an insidious condition, it just creeps up on you one day."

Dr. Pat Abbott, head of the territories mental health unit, says the natives of the North are usually not affected. "This is their world."

Rather, the condition affects southern Canadians, usually married women with young children who move to the North for the sake of a husband's job. Such women spend most of their time in the home, finding it not worth the hour it takes to outfit the children for the harsh outdoors they can withstand for only 15 minutes.

"I'm accused of being chauvinistic," says Dr. Abbott, "but I think women in the North should work if they possibly can."

Mrs. McQuarry, noting that a phenomenon like cabin fever could be common to apartment dwellers in southern Canada, disputes the claim that women are primarily the victims. "Men suffer just as much."

She and Dr. Abbott agree, however, that the phenomenon is most common in March and April, just before the expectations of spring are met.

A distress line operated by the mental health association handles the most calls in April, says Mrs. McQuarry. Of the 90 callers in April, 1975, 45 had psychological or emotional problems which appeared "direct results of this stressful time of year."

Suggestions for a perfect honeymoon

Move over, Dear Ann Landers.

Today we're crowding your corner, lecturing the lovelorn on the subject of the where-to of the honeymoon.

A letter signed Confused: I am 19 and getting married. I need your advice. Where should I go on a honeymoon? My boyfriend is a scuba diver and I'm a skier. He insists we go to the Caribbean and I want to go to the mountains, some place with snow—maybe Chile. Should we compromise and try something new? Where in the world should we go on a honeymoon?

Dear Confused: Considering I never got out of California on my own honeymoon, I think I'd choose some faraway spot—some romantic place. Italy maybe, or perhaps France.

There comes to mind immediately Chateau d'Artigny in France's lovely Loire Valley. This is the former home of the famous French perfumer, Francois Coty, a man who was deeply sensitive to the needs of the heart as well as the nose.

Today it serves as headquarters for honeymooners and others doing the chateau circuit of the Val de Loire. Both heated swimming pool and a one-star restaurant serve the guest at Coty's magnificent digs, 150 miles southwest of Paris.

Coty wished for a chateau fit for a king, which was precisely what he got. At d'Artigny, bedspreads match the wallpaper, red carpets cover the stairway, chandeliers light the public rooms and . . .

But go see for yourself, especially if you happen to be a honeymooner.

Another honeymoon? Well, perhaps I would choose Las Brisas in Acapulco. Yes, I'm sure I would.

The last time I counted there were 200 casitas—each with its own swimming pool—strung up and down a hillside a couple of miles outside of town.

Alas, I was there alone. A honeymoon cottage and no one to share it with.

When guests arrive at Las Brisas, Mexican girls appear with baskets of hibiscus, sprinkling petals in the swimming pool.

Lynda Bird Johnson honeymooned at Las Brisas. She was my neighbor, and each morning the Mexican girls returned with fresh flowers while others stocked the refrigerator with beer.

At Las Brisas when the sun finally gives up, lights flash on down by the bay — a necklace reflected by the incoming tides.

* * *

In Mexico I have in mind another honeymoon hideaway—beyond Mexico City, just over the hill from Cuernavaca in the village of Cocoyoc.

It is an old hacienda and it has stood for 400 years, viaducts run through its walls so that the water creates a sleepy, musical melody for guests who go there seeking romance.

At Hacienda Cococyoc there are special honeymoon offers that include meals, champagne, sightseeing and a photograph album.

At night newlyweds gather in El Trapische, a nightclub installed in the hacienda's old sugar mill. Meals are taken in an ancient barn.

Should someone arrive who is unwed, well, that's all right, too. Mass and marriages are held in the hacienda's private chapel just beyond the ancient patio.

On a second honeymoon perhaps I would choose the Palacio at Bussaco in central Portugal. Once the summer palace of Portuguese kings, it rises on a mountaintop 160 miles north of Lisbon, hemmed in by forests and surrounded by gardens.

Newlyweds and other guests reign in a setting of marble staircases, sculptured gardens, tiled murals, Persian rugs and imported furniture.

For honeymooners with sufficient cash and a desire for complete aloneness, the management offers the key to a suite with its own silver setting, dining room, terrace and marble bath.

Other romance is provided by Greece and its islands — Hydra, Crete, Rhodes, Mykonos. These and many others. I believe, though, I would choose Mykonos.

At Mykonos there is a harbor like a miniature St.-Tropez, a crescent-shaped place, pleasantly warm, with orange and blue fishing boats rocking on the swells.

The waterfront is lined with noisy taverns and small hotels; lovers sit at sidewalk cafes, hypnotized by an incredibly blue sea. Later, as day ends, they sip retsina by candlelight and as darkness spreads there is the melody of strolling musicians.

Afterward the tavernas glow with the light of many candles that burn in old wine jugs at the Nine Muses and Fouskis, and sometimes the music continues until dawn and another day, which begins much like yesterday and ends exactly the same way — warm and peaceful and happy.

With the dawn, those who have forsaken sleep remove their shoes, diving into the water to wash away the sleepiness.

Speaking of a honeymoon, who could deny the romance of Italy? Especially Positano, a seaside village that hangs precariously to cliffs along the Amalfi drive.

Far below the sea heaves gently with its cargo of little fishing boats, and bougainvillea grows purple and heavy over the steep, rocky stairway, shading those who pass on their way to the sea.

Evening breezes are soft, like the skin of someone still young, and when morning comes the lovers, as well as others in Positano, are awakened by the bells of St. Maria Assunta.

There is danger though, for the honeymooner in Positano — a risk that they may toss their airline tickets to the wind, deciding not to go home.

There is also that risk with a honeymoon in Hawaii, the setting I have in mind being Kona Village on the Big Island, a miniature Polynesia complete with native huts and king-size beds.

At Kona Village there are no cars, no smog, no crowds. Remote and peaceful, resting on lava, it faces the sea, trade winds blowing softly through keane trees and coconut palms, the perfect place for a honeymoon. No other civilization for miles around.

And then there is Maison de Ville in New Orleans, a small hotel in the French Quarter, small but with great warmth, the rooms facing a flowered patio and a fountain, all of this just behind the Court of Two Sisters which, as anyone familiar with New Orleans knows, is one of the Quarter's best restaurants.

At Maison de Ville fresh fruit is placed in the rooms daily and morning coffee is served on the patio where guests reflect on the time when steamboats crowded the Ol' Miss.

Other honeymooners sign in at Heritage House, a 19th-century inn overlooking the wild and lonely Mendoeino coast, three hours by car north of San Francisco.

Antiques fill the living room with the lighted fireplace and there is a lounge looking off at the garden and grassy hillside that slips away to the sea, hundreds of feet below.

Zambia's game quandary

LONDON — Zambia, less attuned to the mass tourist industry than its neighbors Kenya, Uganda and Tanzania, is seldom mentioned when it comes to great acres of wild life.

It has nearly 23,000 square miles, or the equivalent area to Belgium and Holland, devoted to national parks. But the number of visitors has been minimal, and the parks remain unspoiled. The largest of Zambia's parks, Kafue, which is as large as Wales, had less than 3,000 paying visitors in 1972.

The Zambian government's tourist drive is bound to increase the number of visitors, and the consequent problems.

In many places species like lions and rhinos have become semi-tame, indifferent to the "four-wheel zebras" the striped Volkswagen Kombis which roam in herds along the roads. And some visitors feel they are not experiencing the real feel of the bush.

A Theatre Immortal

One of the great, glamorous international figures on the English speaking stage has disappeared behind the final curtain. Dame Sybil Thorndike, a dominant theatrical personality for the better part of three-quarters of a century who was still acting in her ninetieth year, bowed out at 93, already in her lifetime one of the theatre's immortals.

Each time someone like Dame Sybil departs they take with them a piece of an age, breaking off a bit of style, tradition, precept, as one would chip off a piece of proscenium cornice that will never be restored in exactly the same way.

For we are no more able to replace a Sybil Thorndike that we are a turn-of-the-century theatre, even if we wished to. Theatres are different now and so are the people who perform in them. A new breed of actors, a new set of traditions grow up, and who would have it otherwise?

Still it's a little sad to say goodbye to a way of life even when the new is already enchanting us.

To experience Dame Sybil's departure and Theatre Passe Muraille in the same week makes the point very clearly.

The great English actress was one of the most versatile artists of our time, her range going all the way from Grand Guignol to modern comedy, but she reigned most supremely in the classical theatre traditions of Sarah Siddons and Ellen Terry.

Greek tragedy, Shakespeare, foreign classics — she possessed them all and so enchanted Bernard Shaw that he called her his ideal Candide and wrote Saint Joan expressly for her.

She also managed to have a 60-year-long happy marriage — her husband was actor-producer Sir Lewis Casson, who died at the age of 94 in 1969 — and had four children, two of each sex. One daughter, Jane came to Canada and married Canadian Stratford actor Douglas Campbell. (Both were members of the Canadian Players Company which toured the country from coast to coast and played in Victoria on several occasions).

SYBIL THORNDIKE . . . a challenging theory

Both Dame Sybil and her husband were notable, even in England, for the beauty, clarity and strength of their voices and one observation worth quoting is that Thorndike, almost to the last weeks of her life, did her daily breathing exercises while reading the paper aloud.

In a taped CBC interview she made a challenging comment concerning theatre audiences.

Most people, if asked why they went to the theatre, would reply, "for entertainment." Not so, says Dame Sybil. People should — and the majority do — according to her argument, go to the theatre to participate in an experience, and in order for that to occur they must be active, not passive, working with the actors.

Nothing dramatic can happen in the theatre unless the people on both sides of the footlights are engaged. That is the essence of her comment.

Very true. And it starts a whole train of thought in motion, including an examination of boredom in the theatre.

The most unforgivable thing playwright, director or actors can do is bore people. That's the first commandment in the theatrical bible — thou shalt not bore thine audience.

If you're ever been bored in the theatre have you analysed the reason? The answer lies in Dame Sybil's statement. It's almost certainly because you haven't been participating, though that's not necessarily your fault.

The play's material is completely uninteresting to you — too obvious, too discursive, too remote. So you give up the effort to work with the actors and therefore are no longer entertained.

Or the production is so poorly designed, the actors so incompetent or miscast that what they are giving you is unacceptable and you reject them. Result, boredom.

Therefore it becomes clearly arguable that the only way entertainment and not boredom is achieved is when you are involved and working in the theatre. You can become angry, shocked, saddened, enchanted or stirred to mirth by the confrontation between you and the stage.

You may or may not say that you have been entertained, but neither have you been bored. You have been aroused and challenged and that is what theatre is all about, whether it's the theatre of ancient Greece, of such as Sybil Thorndike, or a 20th century Canadian farm show.

Hometown Band Arrives

It's not unheard of for a backup group to come out of the shadow of the star and make it on its own individual merits. That is what has been happening with the Hometown Band, noted preeviously as Valdy's backup band and now getting loud critical praise for featured performances.

The Hometown Band with Shari Ulrich of Pied Pumkin will perform at The Belfry, Gladstone at Fernwood, Sunday at 8:30 p.m.

Addition to the group of two of the artists who perform with Ann Mortifee — former Victorian Doug Edwards on guitar, bass and keyboards, and Robbie King on keyboards — has created what one critic calls "a transfiguration."

Busy Summer For Phoenix

Among several summer series shows being prepared at the present time, University of Victoria Theatre and music departments are readying a repertory and a concert season to parallel each other on the campus.

Details of the Phoenix Summer Theatre Company, which will be performing at UVic's Phoenix Theatre from June 25 to July 31, are now available.

This is the Phoenix troupe's fifth season and last year's better than 90-per-cent attendance demonstrates the popularity of this young company.

Artistic co-directors are John Krich and Harvey M. Miller, both members of the theatre department faculty and active in community theatre. In addition, Bindon Kinghorn, technical director of UVic theatre, will direct one of the three scheduled plays.

The plays are a Broadway comedy, 6 Rms Riv Vu, opening June 25; The Real Inspector Hound by Tom Stoppard (author of Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are Dead), opening June 29, and The Thwarting of Baron Bolligrew by Robert Bolt (author of Man for All Seasons).

It's an all-comedy season as befits the summer mood. The first two shows will get 10 performances each and the Bolt play, nine. All curtain times are 8 p.m.

Function of the company is to involve each member in all aspects of production — acting, stagecraft, and design, costume design, publicity and box office.

For the second year the company has been assisted financially by the B.C. Government Professions for Tomorrow grants, permitting students to work in a repertory situation and gain valuable comprehensive experience.

The box office at the Phoenix (477-4821) will begin to handle ticket reservations Wednesday.

Four musical programs arranged by the Department of Music will be presented in eight concerts during July at MacLaurin Building auditorium.

They will take place on Tuesdays with repeats on Thursdays and will feature UVic's Summer Strings with soloists. The final pair, July 27 and 29, will feature duo pianists Winifred Scott and Robin Wood.

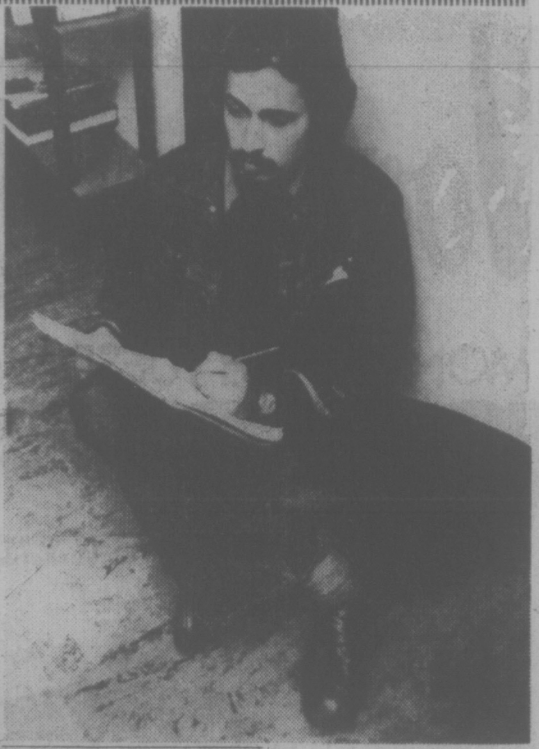
SHOW AT DUSK!



The designing eldest son of Jerry Gosley, Anton, is back in the city for the summer helping to prepare the Summer Smile Show which opens at McPherson Playhouse July 3. Fresh from a stint in the design department of CBC Vancouver, during which he worked on the sets for the Bill Hosie-Andy Stewart TV specials, Anton is busy designing Smile Show sets.

After graduating from UVic in 1973, Anton worked in a London, England, scenic design studio before returning to Canada.

Old Berlin in Cedar Hill

By AUDREY JOHNSON

Visitors entering the rurally set Cedar Hill Community Centre during the first two weeks of July may be a bit astonished to find themselves absorbed into a sophisticated continental atmosphere.

The auditorium will be set up to echo the famous Kit Kat Club of Berlin in the late 20s. On stage — and a bit off as well — the powerful musical, Cabaret will be performed nightly from July 1 to 17.

From the first blare of the slide trombone until the lights come up on the inveigling white-face of the master of ceremonies, expectation mounts in this much lauded and emotionally absorbing piece of musical theatre.

Cabaret is being presented this summer by John Minshall, in co-operation with Kaleidoscope Theatre Productions. If the two-week run at Cedar Hill builds and attendance warrants, the show will continue there to the month's end and then possibly move downtown to the Empress Hotel.

Audiences will sit around night club tables and sip refreshments, thus becoming, in a sense, part of the show.

Cabaret is a story of Berlin in the year 1929, a frenzied time when hysterical fun was the essence of lving and the city was having a final devil-may-care orgy before the encroaching doom of Nazism.

The plot revolves about the love story of English night club singer Sally Bowles and an American writer, echoed by the parallel theme of the lonely Jewish fruit seller and his elderly landlady.

Talented, graceful Paul Liittich of Kaleidoscope will portray the crucial role of the Master of Ceremonies that made Joel Gray famous.

The production is fully professional, presented with the co-operation of Actors Equity. It is directed by Colin Gorrie and designed by Jack Simon of Vancouver. Musical director is Lorna Paterson.

Lead roles are being played by Elizabeth Wallace (Gorrie), artistic head of Kaleidoscope who will be seen as Sally; Craig Davidson, a frequent performer at Edmonton's Citadel as the American Bradshaw; Jean-Paul Destrube as the fruit seller, and Pat Armstrong, known in Canadian theatre from East to West, as the landlady.

Other roles are being taken by Glynis Leyshon, Barbara Poggemiller, Karen Kramer, Cynthia Corbet, Dennis Goodwin, Zdenek Thomas, Anne Britten, Lisa Troniak, Susan Goldwater and Norman Browning.

Danny Costain's place as choreographer has been taken by Jacqueline Sears, a dancer whose experience includes seasons with New York's Robert Joffrey Ballet, and whose skill and imagination proved invaluable to the UVic theatre department for several seasons.

Opening night, July 1, will be a gala occasion and tickets at $20 a person will include a dance after the show and a draw for dinner for two at Antonio's on Centennial Square.

Minshall reports that already about half the gala tickets are sold, others are going exceptionally well and the final night of the initial run is already sold out.

Orders for the gala and other reservations can be made now at his office, 1109 Langley. Regular tickets at $6.50 each will go on sale at McPherson Playhouse box office two weeks prior to the opening.

Notre Dame Sued

CRANBROOK (CP) — Notre Dame University at Nelson has been named as a defendant in a civil suit initiated by a student over course cutbacks at the university.

The student, Nancy Hogue of Nelson, claims the university broke a contract agreement when it terminated the mathematics and physics program due to the provincial government's restraint policies.

The suit claims that by accepting tuition fees for two semesters, the university is obligated to continue those courses.

AT THE GALLERIES

Recent oil paintings of Nudes, Barns and Things, by Chris Doman, go on view Thursday at The Maples Gallery, West Saanich and Keating. The show will run through July 2. Hours are Tuesday through Saturday, 9:30 a.m. to 6 p.m., Sunday, 11 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Currently there is an exhibition and sale of oil paintings by Della Paranich being held at Whale's Arts and Ceramics, 638 Queens. It will continue to the end of June with weekday 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. viewing hours. The artist has pointed, exhibited and sold her work in Edmonton, Calgary, Vancopuver and Victoria.

Maria Lives Up to Her Claims

ROLLING STONE

MARIA MULDAUR: "Sweet Harmony" (Reprise MS 2235).

Sweet Harmony returns Maria Muldaur to the prominence she earned with her first solo album, and its big hit, Midnight at the Oasis. The material is perfectly chosen for Muldaur's distinctly quavering voice; and, to supplement the obvious singer-songwriter fare (amply represented by songs written by Neil Sedaka, Wendy Waldman and Kate McGarrigle), Muldaur chooses the marvelous Smokey Robsinson title cut and such '30s and '40s jazz-styled numbers as Hoagy Carmichael's Rockin' Chair and the mournful We Just Couldn't Say Goodbye. In fact, much of the newer material is also given the jazz treatment.

Unlike Bette Midler, who uses a similar musical approach in order to parody its milieu, Muldaur never camps. If anything, her reverential approach makes Sweet Harmony's seriousness its biggest flaw. Still, such reverence is infinitely preferable to Midler's misguided sloppiness. The only real clinker here is a gospel-soul number As an Eagle Stirreth in Her Nest, which completely misses the joy and passion of Paul Simon's similar Loves Me Like a Rock. Muldaur brings to Sweet Harmony just the kind of emotional honesty and depth of understanding that Linda Ronstadt missed on her recent version of Robinson's Tracks of My Tears.

For that one song, and two or three others, Maria Muldaur is as good as her greatest admirers have ever claimed.

ELLIOTT MURPHY: "Night Lights" (RCA APL1-1318).

Night Lights should be Murphy's biggest record. He's working with his best band, and his producer, Steve Katz, is finally a competent one. But except for one brilliant moment, Diamonds by the Yard, whose mood is so haunting that details don't matter, most of the music on this record is merely competent, derivative, studio formula stuff. And that lack of musical originality is what keeps Murphy from becoming a middle-class Bruce Springsteen.

Like Springsteen, Murphy was first acclaimed for lyrics and music that were updated Dylanesque. But he was writing about the richer, suburban cousins of Springsteen's working-class, small-town teenagers. Murphy managed to capture perfectly on his first album the characters of his milieu, and the music he used as settings was fine stuff, based upon the songs of Lou Reed and Bob Dylan. Unfortunately, on his third album, the rich kid scenes are all but gone in favor of a nostalgia for the Parisian expatriates of 40 years ago, including songs about Isadora Duncan, and (unbelievably) the Abraham Lincoln Brigade. The whole point of Murphy's original excursion into this sort of thing, Great Gatsby, on his first album, was that it updated Fitzgerald's character. His new attempts sound like self-parodies.

Murphy still has the potential to become one of rock and roll's brighter lights. But he should spend more time with his guitar and less with the great American novelists. That way he might become a hero instead of standing around looking for one.

Vital Route Study Slated

A pilot program to study ocean behavior in Johnstone Strait may lead to large scale investigation of the inside shipping lane to Alaska and north coast B.C.

Environment Canada oceanographers have placed a number of recording instruments in the Campbell River area of Discovery Passage, southern end of the waterway connecting the Gulf of Georgia with Queen Charlotte Sound.

Physicist Rick Thomson said the department hoped to do a large-scale program covering some 150 miles of Johnstone Strait, whose significance is two-fold.

The waterway is a vital shipping route that cuts time and miles off the alternative and often stormy voyage around the west coast of Vancouver Island. It may become a regular route for Alaskan crude oil tankers heading for Puget Sound refineries.

From an oceanographic point of view the waterway has an influence on tides and currents in Georgia Strait.

The research vessel Vector will spend the week of June 20 monitoring current and recovering instruments including tide meters, wind anemometers, current guages and temperature and salinity meters that were deployed at various depths.

Later, instruments will be placed in Georgia Strait from Iona Jetty westward as part of a study to monitor the persistent North Arm current of the Fraser River and its influence on pollution and sedimentation in the gulf and as far as Burrard Inlet to the north.

Although field work of the department has been affected somewhat by federal spending restraints, Vector will again take part in continuing research by the University of B.C. Institute of Oceanography this month and later.

A combined geological-physical study of upper coastal inlets is a principal feature of work on the deep inlets conducted by UBC. A few years ago the university researchers discovered manganese nodules in Jervis Inlet, similar to the ones dredged from the South Pacific floor using submarine mining techniques.

How Fort Nelson Made a Splash

elizabeth forbes

I've a delightful story for you today. One I'm sure you will enjoy.

It's about a Grade 11 class of 23 boys and girls in Victoria recently from Fort Nelson, as part of a learning experience field trip.

The program included a visit to Government House where they were taken on tour of the residence and told about the office of the Queen's representative in British Columbia.

Classes from many places in the province visit Government House now in the course of a school year, and when they do Lieutenant-Governor Walter Owen makes sure, at the end of each tour, the boys and girls are served soft drinks and cookies.

He was not in residence when the Fort Nelson class were there, so Government House secretary Gar Dixon acted as host for the tour and the pop and cookies ending.

Dixon asked questions. What was it like up at Fort Nelson? Did it have a lake?

Came a loud and decided "No!"

If not a lake, did it have a river? Again, the same loud "No!"

Well, if no lake or river, was there a public swimming pool of any sort?

A third time, a full and resounding "No!" With the added inference there wasn't much chance of swimming in or near Fort Nelson.

"That's too bad!" Dixon said. "If you had your bathing suits here, you might have had a swim in our pool."

Much to his surprise, a loud chorus of shouts made it clear they did have their bathing suits with them, because they wanted to swim in motel pools at places they stopped along the way.

Dixon was as good as his word. The girls were soon in the ladies' change room, boys in the men's quarters, and in a matter of minutes, 23 excited young people were having fun in the outdoor pool at Government House.

Recently a letter was received by Lieutenant-Governor Owen, from that Fort Nelson class, expressing thanks for the tour and especially for a dip in the pool.

"Government House was the highlight of our field trip," the letter said.

When the Lieutenant-Governor is in residence and school classes arrive for a visit, His Honor usually conducts the tour of Government House himself.

He likes young people, meets them easily and establishes a friendly relationship with them almost immediately.

Among recent visits where he has personally acted as host, was that of a special class of 12 youngsters around ten and eleven-years-of-age, from Margaret Jenkins School here.

A few days later, a dozen thank-you letters arrived at Government House, all addressed to the Lieutenant-Governor.

One youngster wrote: "Seeing you was a once-in-a-lifetime thrill. Hearing you talk was twice as thrilling. You have a very nice house!"

And that, I would say, sums it all up extremely well.

Postscript: An interesting and exciting gathering scheduled to follow close on the heels of Habitat and Habitat Forum in Vancouver, is the International Council of Women triennial conference at University of British Columbia, June 21 to July 2.

At that time women from 68 countries will be assembled to decide on measures to be taken to reduce the danger caused by water pollution which is approaching crisis proportions and posing an immediate threat to the health and livelihood of the world population.

Other matters to be considered include research into alternate sources of energy, such as solar and wind power; and measures to control air transportation of hazardous cargo from one country to another.

Presiding will be the international president, Dr. Mehrangiz Dolatshahi of Iran, recently named as her country's ambassador to Denmark.

Theme of the conference is Challenge of the Future. It will be developed along the following lines: (1) full responsibility in public and political life; (2) women as economic factors in the community and (3) young men and women-assets to development.

Besides workshops and plenary sessions, time has been provided for the 400 delegates to visit other parts of British Columbia.

They will participate in a ceremony at the Peace Arch on the border between United States and Canada, stage an international night program and visit Victoria and the Lester B. Pearson College of the Pacific.

Special displays and sales will include books written by council members also handicrafts from member countries. tries.

Resolutions adopted by ICW since its founding in 1888, have been collected in a book and will be available.

As ICW has participating status at the United Nations, resolutions approved at plenary sessions during the coming triennial, will be submitted to UN specialized agencies.

National councils will also be urged to carry them to their own governments for action at the national level.

An added event will be the annual meeting of the National Council of Women of Canada on Sunday, June 27.

Presiding at this meeting will be the Canadian president, Mrs. Gordon B. Armstrong of Sidney, B.C.

By LYNN and JOEL RAPP

Dear Lynn and Joel:

Abide with me while I relate: I have always had plants in my home and I always will, because I find them to be the best possible companions. I'm a 62-year-old widow and my plants do a great deal to help me from wallowing in self-pity and loneliness. My husband and I had a common bond with nature in every form. He enjoyed living greenery in our home as much as I do — especially African violets. Several of my African Violets are coming into bloom, and lately, I've noticed they bloom longer than they used to. Could it be because I've transferred them all to a window where they get north light? Is the extended light helping them to bloom? Yours for nature in all its glory!—J.C.

Dear J.C.:

What a lovely way to start the day — opening your letter and reading of your experience. As to the extended blooming period of your violets, it most assuredly could be the better light conditions. All blooming plants and foliage plants with variegated or colorful leaves do better with more light, their energy source. However, we suspect that having you as their "mother" also has a lot to do with their outstanding performance.

CATHEDRAL STILL HAS ANCIENT TAPESTRIES

By MAY E. MacLEAN

My husband and I took our usual Spring vacation in England again this year, and one of the interesting places we visited was Winchester Cathedral in Hampshire.

Steeped in history from Roman times, it must have once possessed many fine examples of richly embroidered church vestments and tapestries. But the ravages of Henry VIII's reformation and later the depredations of Cromwell and his men, left the Cathedral bare and desolate; so much so, that when Mary Tudor was married to Phillip of Spain on July 25th 1554, a magnificent set of tapestries, depicting the Conquest of Tunis, was sent from Spain to decorate the Cathedral. These same tapestries, which had to be returned, can still be seen today in Madrid, Barcelona and Seville.

Losses continued in the 17th century and you can read the melancholy entries such as the following in the old English script and spelling:

"A ritch Canopy embrodered with perle to be carried over the King when his Ma (Majesty) cometh to the Cathedral Church" and margined "Stollen by the troopers Decemb 13. 1642." And again:

During the Victorian era, attempts were made to replace the embroideries. A very fine and elaborate gold-work Festal Frontal which took almost six years to embroider was presented by a Mrs. Wyatt of Hawley Parsonage at Christmas 1887. In the Chapel of the Holy Sepulchre there is a lovely frontal worked in silk from an Italian design about 1900, by Edith, 4th Viscountess Hood.

But it wasn't until 1931 that the Winchester Cathedral Broderers came into being. A Miss Pesel was the moving spirit in the undertaking to replenish the Cathedral, and gradually a band of workers from all over the county was formed.

The first presentation of kneelers, stall cushions and alms bags took place in May 1932 with the last formal one in 1936. Ideas of design and details were gathered and researched, and no two cushions or kneelers are the same; finally producing in effect, a condensed history of Winchester, from St. Birinus in the 7th century up to the preservation work of 1905-1912 and so on to the 1930's! It is well worth a visit should you be in the vicinity.

Tomatoes are easy to grow, and even in a small garden, room can be found for at least a few tomato plants.

According to the 20-page illustrated booklet "Growing Garden Tomatoes", in most Canadian regions it is not advisable to see tomatoes outdoors. It is safer to start them indoors and set them out as soon as the danger of frost has disappeared.

There is a wide choice of shapes, sizes and colours of tomatoes. Select a variety which is well suited for your local climate.

How many tomatoes should you plant? Depending on the variety and the care you can give them, each plant will yield up to five clusters of fruit with a total weight of about six pounds.

Although the booklet points out it is more practical and economical for home gardeners to buy green-house grown tomato plants, it nevertheless offers directions on how to grow your own plants, how to transplant and care for them. It also tells you how to save seeds for next year.

If tomatoes are picked when they are fully ripened they can be stored in the refrigerator for several weeks without losing flavor or color.

Remarks to Make Kinettes Rejoice

KITCHENER, Ont. (CP) — "Just look at my nails, aren't they neat?" "I just love this eye-shadow. Look what it does to my eyes. And it's not hard to do."

These are some of the remarks, mingled with giggles, that make the Kitchener-Waterloo Kinettes rejoice. Last fall they started a self-development and charm course for women residents at the Fisher Residence for Retarded Adults.

The course is being conducted by Joan Heaton, who owns a Kitchener modelling school, and is the first type of self-development program for the retarded in the area.

Mrs. Gloria Spencer, resident program supervisor, said: "It is helping our residents blend into the social life of the community by giving them more self-confidence."

The women were beautifully dressed for the party — but, says Kinette Mrs. Ann Watson, it takes more than a beautiful gown to make a woman feel at ease.

The Kinettes, under Mrs. Heaton's guidance, help the residents on a one-to-one basis, teaching them basic beauty skills.

"The course is in keeping with the philosophy of the residence because retarded persons have a right to as normal a life as is possible," says Mary Ann Riach, co-ordinator of the residence.

The community residence is designed to serve as home for 25 retarded adults who, with a little support and supervision, can be integrated into the community.

The course, designed to teach basic good grooming, skin care and how to walk and sit properly, has already proven its worth.

"The women used to dress casually for our visits; now they dress as if for company," said Linda Fox, vice-president of the Kinettes.

Mrs. Heaton said that "it's important to look attractive. Right or wrong, people judge us by our appearance. People respond to a well-groomed person."

There have been side benefits. One resident, an habitual nail biter, stopped the habit after her first manicure lesson.

PROPER STORAGE

TORONTO (CP) — When freezing fruits and vegetables, don't stack the packages, says Agriculture Canada. Instead, place them against the freezer's walls or shelves, one layer deep.

Food should be thoroughly frozen within 24 hours. Frozen fruits and vegetables may be stored up to one year if kept at zero degrees Celsius and adequately packaged.

For summer chic under the sun and the stars . . .

The new French pajama look is beautifully interpreted in a stunning outfit we saw at Gibson's this week . . . It's a polyester crepe two-piece pajama by Sam Sherkin . . . with low yoke neckline, tie belt, and wide pajama pants permanently pleated all over with the tiniest, narrowest pleats imaginable! . . . Same type of pleating forms the full sleeves which are cut with the new push-up effect . . . This very smart creation, which comes in either orange or lemon ice . . . is bound to be a sensation wherever it appears these coming summer evenings! . . . Now, we've talked to you before about jumpsuits . . . which can actually be more tailored than pant suits . . . and sexy as all get-out when covering the right body . . . by which we mean a woman who's reasonably tall and slender . . . (If you don't fall into this category, better you should try something else!) . . . But if you qualify, figure-wise . . . do have a look at a new linen blend jumpsuit just new in at Gibson's . . . It has straight legs and little tabs on the short sleeves . . . leather belt with gilt tabs . . . round white buttons . . . We saw it in both summer blue and cream . . . each with a printed silk scarf . . . As pretty a sundress as we've seen in many a moon is an Albert Nippon knee-length pinafore tunic dress with separate skirt cut with a slit at the back . . . Buttercup yellow polyester and cotton, with a big matching head scarf . . . Gibson's, 708 View St., 384-5913.

Smart denims from Ports International . . .

There just doesn't seem to be any end to denim's popularity . . . It's no longer the exclusive property of the young . . . but is being worn effectively by women of all ages! . . . For instance, a new shipment from Ports we saw at Eaton's Townhouse on Monday is made up almost entirely of denims . . . There are 100% cotton denim wrap skirts . . . both long and short . . . to tie smoothly around your waist, and big pockets to hold your bits and pieces . . . Then there are shirt dresses in two different styles . . . one with ¾-length roll-back sleeves, buttoning half-way down the front, deep patch pockets and self-tie belt . . . This is in a lighter blue denim than the skirts . . . A second style is very similar except that it widens out under the arms to become quite full in the skirt, and has side slash pockets . . . And here's a hint from us to you! Why not work a bit of white embroidery on your denims? A lady on our cruise ship last year had done this, and her things looked simply smashing! . . . Eaton's Townhouse, 382-7141, local 367.

LETTER-WRITING NEGLECTED ART

NEW YORK (AP) — "Letters can be more than a means of formal communication," says Margery Forer, creative head of a firm that produces social stationery. "Letters are unique. Each one is as different as the person who writes it."

Unfortunately, she adds, letter-writing as an art is being neglected today, thanks to the convenience of postcards and telephones.

"But the spoken word cannot be cherished and reread countless times, nor does an open-face card inspire any intimate exchange of thoughts."

Letter-writing first flowered when postal service became generally available and when there was adequate leisure time.

"In earlier times, statesmen and princes communicated with one another but correspondence between friends or family members was rare.

"It has been said that the age of letter-writing opened with the birth of Madame de Sevigny in the 17th century and closed with the death of 19th-century author Prosper Merimee.'

Madame de Sevigny, Mrs. Forer relates, left a young widow, after a brief and unhappy marriage, lavished all her affections on her daughter. After the young girl's marriage, says historian Will Durante, "the mother dispatched a letter by almost every post — sometimes twice a day for 19 years." More than 1,500 of these letters survive and Durant describes them as "among the most treasured classics in the literature of France."

"Considering the French penchant for letter-writing, it seemed only natural that I should invite the famous Parisian couturiers Hubert de Givenchy, to design letter paper," says Mrs. Forer, describing his first collection as "discreetly contemporary" and suitable for men or women.

"Not all letter-writers become famous," she concedes, "but one thing is certain — because letters satisfy a universal craving to receive news, there will always be at least one eager reader waiting for each letter."

That's a Habit to Lick

Wonderful World of Animals

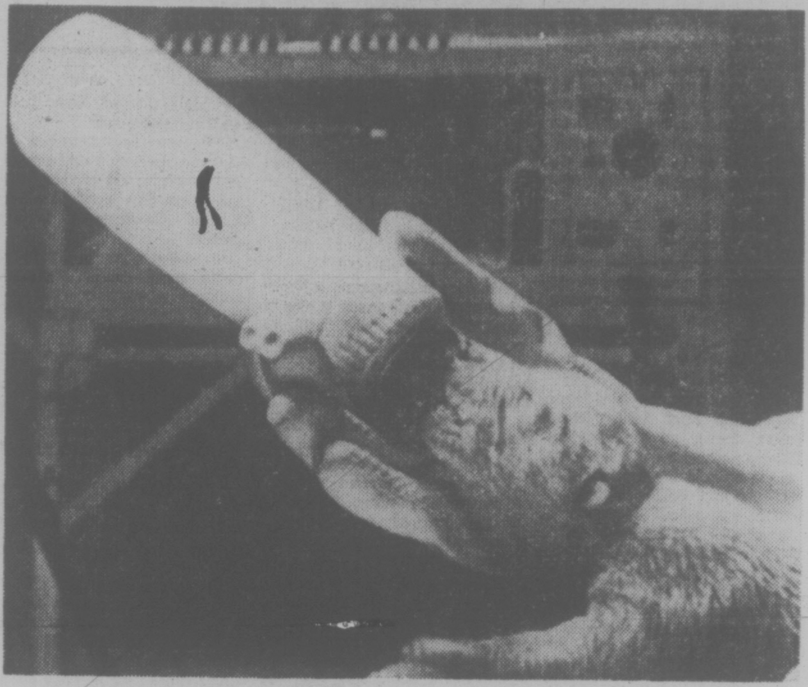
By Dr. FRANK MILLER

DEAR DR. MILLER:

Dumbo, our Saint Bernard pup, has an urge to lick people. It's been getting worse. If we ignore it, will he just outgrow it eventually? People who don't know him sometimes get a little nervous about it.—A.A.

DEAR A.A.:

The bigger Dumbo gets, the more nervous strangers are likely to be when he starts tasting them. Even those unconcerned about his appetite would undoubtedly prefer to pick their own time and place for a bath. Better begin now to discourage his licking habit. Suddenly starting to scold him when it's been permissible up to now would be quite confusing. Whenever possible, discourage by distraction. Move away from him when he starts to lick. Stick a large (not swallowable size) ball in his mouth. Pet him vigorously, or gently. Do something else with him immediately. Offer him a drink (of water). Let him watch TV — or whatever. Distract him in some way. The less you let him lick and the more alternatives you provide, the quicker and easier he'll get over his habit — an especially messy one with a St. Bernard.



SUCKLING BLIND, a polar bear cub is given a bottle at feeding time in the Worcester, Mass., Science Centre.

DEAR DR. MILLER:

Our cat, Simi, chews his nails a lot. Why does he do it, do you think? Is he nervous? He doesn't act like it in other ways.—M.F.

DEAR M.F.:

Simi could be nervous or bored. He might also have a foot infection, fungus usually, involving the base of the nails. It, could, too, be Simi's system for pussycat pedicuring, using his teeth in lieu of clippers, file or scratching post to keep his nails neat.

DEAR DR. MILLER:

Tommy, my tarantula, is very lightweight and stiff as a board. I think he died. So I gave him a funeral. I plan to get another one when the weather warms up, but Mother says I shouldn't. She thinks I was just lucky that Tommy didn't ever bite me. I tried to tell her that tarantulas aren't really as bad as they look. Can you help me convince her?

DEAR C.B.:

It's true. Tommy Tarantula's non-truculent, even cheerful (?), personality was typical. Tarantulas generally are easygoing where people are concerned. For that matter, there isn't any tarantula native to this country that's venomous to humans. If tarantulas are irritating to some people physically, that's because they can shoot hairs from their legs which, upon landing on skin or mucous membranes, can cause a painful, inflammatory (but not dangerous) reaction.

DEAR DR. MILLER:

We have a Puli with a long, rope-like hair coat — corded, they call it. Patrick has a little tumor on his back which, according to his doctor, should come off. He wants to clip away the hair from the area so he can operate. We're afraid to have this operation done at all because we've heard the hair might never look the same again. Couldn't we just leave the tumor unless it gets real big?—J.D.

DEAR J.D.:

Patrick's doctor is the best one to determine whether or not waiting is feasible, or even safe. A biopsy may have to be done to determine this. Certainly, now would be the time when it would be easiest to remove the tumor. In fact, it might even be possible to part the hair coat prior to preparation of the surgical field in such a way that very few cords of hair would have to be clipped. After such surgery, the hair coat in the clipped area may or may not regain its original moplike appearance. If on biopsy the tumor proves to be malignant, there should be no question about priorities, and surgical removal would be indicated regardless of cosmetic complications, if any.

DEAR DR. MILLER:

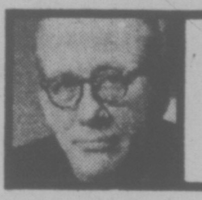
I've noticed when I allow some green algae in my aquarium, the fish seem to do the better for it. Having just set up my first saltwater aquarium, I'm wondering if algae isn't desirable here, too. If it is, will one of those sunlight fluorescent tubes over the tank do the job?—A.K.

DEAR A.K:

Yes, the ultraviolet fluorescent tube will stimulate plant growth. It should be installed less than 18 inches from the water. You'd keep it on constantly, initially, to stimulate growth. For a fast start, obtain an algae culture from a dealer.

SAVING LIVES AND DOLLARS

By DR. WILLIAM J. WELCH



medical report

The fond and reasonable dream of every public health expert is that prevention of disease will one day make obsolete all the elaborate technology devised to treat catastrophic disease.

There is strong precedent for such hopeful dreams.

The elaborate night and day nursing care once required for the expectant treatment of typhoid fever is long forgotten since the advent of clean drinking water and of effective antibiotics for the sporadic case.

Who, since effective immunization became a reality, any longer knows the elaborate technical details of the treatment of paralytic polio by the method of Sister Kenny?

Who regrets the painful and risky treatment of lung tuberculosis called "pneumothorax" with its air pocket pumped into the chest, or ribs cut away, to force a lung cavity to collapse and thus seal off, perhaps to heal?

What then, some now ask, will happen to the expensive electronic gear and costly surgical devices used to treat coronary artery heart disease when we learn how to prevent the narrowing of the vessels that causes heart attack and chest pain?

With such thoughts in mind, cost-effectiveness studies on mobile coronary care units are being urged by public health specialists who suggest that the money might better be spent on detection methods and prophylaxis.

Mobile coronary care units, which are ambulances equipped with electronic devices for emergency on-site treatment of sudden cardiac collapse, have proved to be the most effective means available for the specific management of out-of-hospital cardiac emergencies.

However, the questioners point out, in one study, although rescue squad personnel succeeded in reviving nearly 200 out of 300 such patients, only 101 survived long enough to be hospitalized. Among the 42 ultimate survivors of this group who were discharged from the hospital, the mean survival was only 13 months.

In another study, successful resuscitation was accomplished in 43 per cent of patients treated, with long-term survival of the resuscitated patients at 26 per cent.

Nobody knows yet how to identify men and women who are vulnerable to sudden heart attack, and symptoms that might serve as a warning of its imminence are few, if any. Therefore, mobile coronary care units have been urgently recommended by experts in emergency medicine and have received enthusiastic community support all over.

Those who question the advisability of such units do not question their ability to save lives. They believe however, that the number of people who benefit in the long run may be too few to justify the cost of operating the units.

This is the bookkeeper mentality talking, the sort of cost-benefit expert widely admired in bureaucratic circles. He is usually far from the front line of medicine and very far from taking care of the sick.

If a member of your family or mine is among the 43 per cent who make it to the hospital, and is among the 26 per cent who achieve long-term survival, who cares what the cost effectiveness ratio turns out to be?.

Keeping the books is no doubt admirable and necessary, but it is very, very difficult to try to put a dollar limit on what is a legitimate expenditure to save one life.

Talked-to Roses Bloom in Snow

NEW YORK (AP) — They crowded into a small church to hear about a village on Scotland's North Sea coast where cabbages are said to weigh 40 pounds and roses bloom in the snow.

The plants flourish because the people communicate with them and live harmoniously with nature, Peter Caddy, who founded the community in 1962, told his audience of 300 persons.

The village, called Findhorn, is about 25 miles northeast of Inverness on a barren, wind-swept peninsula. The lushness of the vegetation has been described by visitors and in several recent books.

Caddy said Findhorn's 200 residents make their living by harvesting plants and selling handiwork from a crafts shop and a printing press to an increasing number of visitors.

Literature provided by the group said certain residents received gardening direction from "an evolutionary order of angelic beings" which are part of the plants. It said the result was the development of special composts, fertilizers and plant culture techniques which account for the unusual growth.

Caddy said Findhorn's significance lies not in what is produced in the garden, but what happens to those who tend it.

"It's a matter of a changing consciousness," he said. "An improvement in the quality of their being. A movement to a higher consciousness."

Caddy, a British Royal Air Force squadron commander in Burma during the Second World War, said he founded the community at the direction of his wife, Eileen.

Mrs. Caddy said she received instruction from a spiritual voice which only she could hear. The plan included founding a small college, which offers courses such as revelation and gardening.

Caddy said the people of Findhorn recently bought a hotel in nearby Forres to provide accommodation to the more than 50 visitors who arrive each week.

One of those who attended the Caddys' presentation at the Church of the Holy-Communion was Jodi Desmond of New York City, who said she visited Findhorn recently after reading a book about it.

"I stayed a week in Findhorn and a week at the hotel," she said. "Something is at work there which people are ignoring elsewhere."

Mistakes Are Past

DEAR ABBY: Last summer we sent Jimmy, our 12-year-old son, back east to visit both sets of grandparents. They live within 15 minutes of one another, and Jimmy had a wonderful time visting back and forth.

When he came home, he said he was very upset when his paternal grandparents told him stories about how "stupid" his father had been in school and what a "cry baby" and "sissy" he had been as a boy. This hurt my jusband's feelings, and it took us a long time to explain to Jimmy that his grandparents shouldn't have put down his father—who's a wonderful man and deserves respect.

Jimmy wants to go back this summer, but we don't want him exposed again to derogatory tales about his father. Should I write a note asking those grandparents to please refrain from telling such stories? They are very thoughtless and insensitive people, but there is no excuse for ignorance. CONCERNED

DEAR CONCERNED. I doubt if anything you write to your in-laws will help the situation — and it may worsen it. (They probably thought they were being "entertaining.") Tell Jimmy that if his grandparents resume such stories of his father's boyhood, to tell them politely that no matter what kind of boy their son was, he is now a wonderful man and a super father, and he (Jimmy) would rather not hear about his faults as a child.

GOLDEN DAYS ARE OVER FOR RAG COLLECTORS

WINNIPEG (CP) — Rag collecting is an important industry to the culture of Canada says Allan R. Golden, a 29-year-old self-admitted millionaire.

"Rag collectors are a dying profession," he said. "There's not a great market in it any more."

Once an integral part of the Winnipeg scene, rag collectors are rapidly becoming a thing of the past — with the help of civic officials.

Booming licence fees for rag collectors won't help to bolster the dwindling trade, Golden said.

A 1976 licence and its accompanying colored numbered button which reads City of Winnipeg Rag Collector, costs $25—an increase of 400 per cent compared with last year's $5 fee.

City council raised all licensing fees in a bylaw passed in March.

The city is driving rag collectors to extinction, said Golden, who has been collecting rags and other recyclable materials since he was four years old.

"Rags were a form of financial exchange," he said. "You could buy things with rags."

A bundle of rags was worth a 10-cent admission to a movie theatre. A big bundle meant additional treats from the candy counter. Sometimes draw tickets were given for bundles, with prizes awarded during movie intermissions.

Mothers and neighbors used to watch clothes lines closely on movie days to make sure the family laundry didn't disappear with an enterprising showbound boy or girl.

Rags were recycled into cloth used in chairs and mattresses, a practice eliminated today by health regulations.

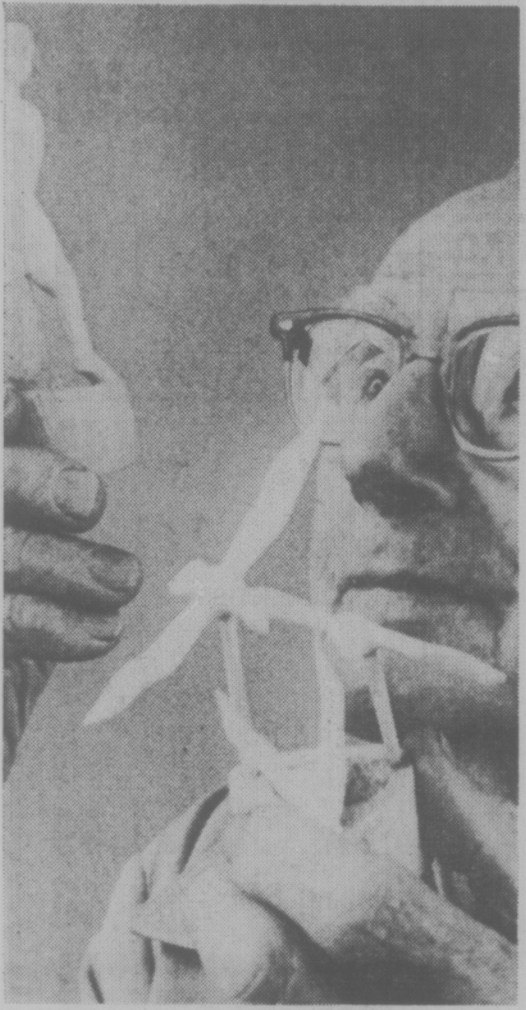
Now rags are bundled and sold to companies like service stations for cleaning. Sometimes the same rags get recycled and resold for more cleaning duties, Golden said.

But the heyday of rag collecting is over. "People just don't throw away things the way they used to."

"There are not as many salvagable materials any more," said Golden, who branched out into collecting scrap metal where "most of the money was."

Even the scrap-metal market has fallen, a victim of the invention of plastics, he said.

The seventh of 10 children, raised by a mother widowed by the Second World War, Golden now acts as financial consultant for Monarch Life Assurance Co., operates his own cartage and moving firm and owns a number of real estate properties.



SOUP BONE CARVINGS are the work of Fred Mitchell, 89, of Vancouver, who uses small files and a jack-knife on the bones which he says are an excellent substitute for expensive ivory.

REWARD FOR THE 'KID'

HARTFORD, Conn. (UPI) — All Karen Klish has gotten is some seedy calls in her pleas for the return of her pet Avocado plant named "The Kid"

The 27-year-old medical technician said she ran a week-long newspaper ad in the lost and found column last week looking for the four-foot plant.

"It took me 18 months to grow it from a pit. I cried when it was gone," she said.

A plantnapper sprinted up the fire escape to her third floor landing while she was asleep May 22 and pulled "the Kid" from about 60 pounds of dirt inside a plastic trash can.

"I didn't think anyone could move it but I was wrong," she said.

Out-Patient Psychiatric Treatments

MONTREAL (CP) — The need to reduce overcrowding in a psychiatric outpatient clinic has given rise to a new method of treating neurotic patients using audio-visual aids and nonpsychiatrists.

Called short-term dynamic psychotherapy, the method is credited to Dr. Habib Davanloo, director of external services in psychiatry at Montreal General Hospital. A recent symposium hailed the Davanloo approach as revolutionary.

Intended to cut the period of treatment and so alleviate overcrowding at the clinic, the method calls for patients to be televised in sessions with therapists. Experimental groups of therapists—which may include psychiatric nurses, psychologists, or family practitioners—then discuss the results of the sessions.

Dr. Davanloo estimates that the average number of sessions needed is 25. With traditional methods, patients have been in psychotherapy for as long as five or six years.

Prospective patients are screened to determine whether short-term psychotherapy can be used on them. No medications are used during the sessions.

"The severity of the illness is not the issue," Dr. Davanloo said. "However, patients cannot be psychotic. They must be motivated and believe their problems stem from psychological difficulties within themselves."

With this treatment the area of conflict is immediately put into focus, and the tendency on the part of the patient to avoid the problem is eliminated.

"We try to establish a therapeutic alliance," said the doctor. "Our therapists confront and challenge the patients— force them to bring the problem out into the open and face it.

"If they sit there expecting the therapists to give them all the answers, they're mistaken. Therapy is a two-way street."

He said the treatment works for about 25 to 30 per cent of the psychiatric population at the hospital.

"We like to have some feedback," Dr. Davanloo said, adding that there is a follow-up period of five years after treatment is completed.

All results are sent to Harvard University in the United States and Tavistock Clinic in London for proof and verification in medical research.

"This is no miracle cure and it works for a limited number of people," Dr. Davanloo said. "But it has helped to break the cycle of long-term psychotherapeutic treatment—and the results have been impressive."

Narcotic Abusers Aged

NEW YORK (AP) — Old before their time is the way physicians describe young persons who use "hard" drugs from three to five years.

"In fact, you can't trust your eyes," said Dr. A. Everette James, chairman of the department of radiology of Vanderbilt University Hospital, Nashville, Tenn., at a science writers' forum.

"One has to inspect their records and medical history," said Dr. James, "because the physical appearance of amphetamine addicts often suggests that they are much older than their chronological age."

It isn't only in outward appearance that addicts prematurely age, said Dr. Nalvin Bumbaugh, professor of radiology at Harvard. He cited a 17-year-old boy on methamphetamine who collapsed "and bled just like a hypertensive patient in his 60s, or 70s."

The x-ray view of the blood vessels in such patients, Dr. Bumbaugh said, leaves the impression that "some of these vessel changes are almost like you see in senile patients."

"It's as though the drugs have the same effect in a few months that the normal wear and tear of life requires 40 to 50 years to develop."

Baha'is send delegation to Habitat

The spiritiual roots of human society should not be overlooked during people's natural preoccupation with the pressing material problems of society.

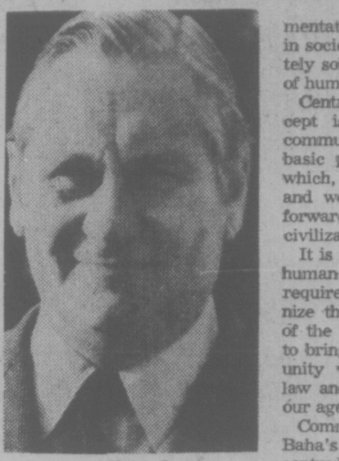
This is the view stressed by members of the Baha'i International Community attending the Habitat conference on human setlements sponsored by the United Nations in Vancouver, Rolland McGee, chairman of the Victoria spritual assembly said this week.

In the Baha'i view, it is not only the physical body which must be sheltered and fed.

"The rational and spiritual qualities which are the source of man's growth, as well as the tools for his mature cooperation with his fellow men, these, too must be nourished," Baha'i delegates stated in conference workshops with delegates.

The Baha'i International Community is accredited as an international non-governmental organization in consultative status with the UN Economic and Social Council.

Baha'i delegates to Habitat were headed by Prof. Jameson Bond, Ottawa: Dr. Glen Eyford, Edmonton; Donald MacLaren, Vancouver; Mrs. Lei Chapman, Alaska, and Mrs. Sheila Banani, San Francisco.



Bond
. . . heads delegation

At present there are more than 17,000 Baha'i communities throughout the world developing according to the social and spiritual principles revealed by Baha'u'llah, prophet-founder of the Baha'i faith, about a century ago.

Baha'is believe that implementation of these principles in society at large will ultimately solve the major problems of human settlements.

Central to the Baha'i concept is the idea that "the community should reflect the basic purpose of human life, which, in essence, is to know and worship God, and carry forward an ever-advancing civilization."

It is also affirmed that ". . . human happiness in our time requires that all people recognize the fundamental oneness of the human race and strive to bring mankind into unity, a unity which is the spiritual law and supreme necessity of our age."

Communities in the future, Baha's envisage, will be centred around a house of worship "open to all people of every background and conviction" and "around which the scientific, educational humanitarian and administrative institutions of each community will resolve."

Although the "ultimate richness" of such a community life can now be only dimly imagined, Baha'is feel that the "pattern upon which such a development can take place . . . can be clearly discerned . . . and should be pursued with faith, courage, and determination."

People theme for Lutherans

Reaching out to the "everyday person," listening to the people — these are the ways a group of Lutheran women from Victoria see the theme of a convention now meeting in Vancouver.

The theme of the convention is 'Lord, open my eyes to others' needs, cultures, denominations.' The convention is the eighth biennial of the Lutheran Church Women of the Western Canada Synod.

Delegates from 46 congregational organizations in Alberta and British Columbia started their three-day conference Friday at the Vancouver School of Theology on the University of B.C. campus.

Haida eyes have been chosen to symbolize the theme of the convention and "eye openers" have been chosen to put across the message.

Among the eye openers to be presented are discussion on literacy, world peace, and the role of women in the emerging church. There are three branches of the Lutheran church in North America and discussions are going on which some hope will lead to the merging of all Lutheran church bodies in Canada into one church.

Women from Victoria's Grace Lutheran Church have prepared a display to spark interest in researching social concerns and other topics.

Attending from Victoria are Val Knebel, Herta Albrecht and Edith Fliegenschmidt of Good Shepherd Lutheran Church; Blanche McCallum, Margaret Bruce, Jan Nelson, Doris Bergbusch, Martha Hanowski and Anke Schaddelee of Grace Lutheran.

OTTAWA (CP) — Immigration to Canada dropped by 14 per cent in 1975 in the wake of tighter government controls.

Witnesses ask help in plight

Victoria's Jehovah's Witnesses are joining their brethren throughout the world in asking the community at large for help in stopping atrocities against Witnesses in the Central African country of Malawi.

The appeal came this week from Richard Tannhauser, Victoria congregation overseer, who is asking citizens to register protests by writing to Malawi's President H. K. Banda.

The bone of contention is the refusal of Jehovah's Witnesses to become members of a political party. In Malawi everyone has to buy a Congress Party card which bears the picture of President Banda.

Without this card, which they refuse to buy, Witnesses in many areas are not allowed to buy food, draw water from wells, live in their homes or have police protection, Tannhauser reports.

Witnesses see the issue as one of religion and conscience and expect religious freedom from a country which, as a member of the United Nations, avows that freedom.

Tannhauser has a sheaf of reports of Witnesses being beaten up, humiliated, driven from their homes, raped and killed. An estimated 5,000 are being held in prisons and prison camps.

Malawian officials in general have withheld public comments or denied there was any problem.

A UPI dispatch from London last December said that Malawi's high commissioner in London, Robert Mbaya, denied all charges.

"There are no detention camps," he said. "The charges are completely wrong. The Jehovah's Witnesses are an outlawed organization ... they do not exist in Malawi."

But the Witnesses estimate they have about 30,000 members, adults and children.

Banda was quoted last November in the Malawi News as saying that all church denominations are allowed to worship in his country except Jehovah's Witnesses. He described them as the "Devils of God."

Writing in The Observer of London, England, last December, Colin Legum said that "detailed evidence of this new reign of terror rests on statements collected by the Witnesses' Watchtower Society, but is also independently corroborated by reports coming out of the villages."

This week in Victoria the Witnesses' overseer appealed to "all lovers of justice to register their protest by writing to Life President H. K. Banda, Malawi, Central Africa.

"In appealing to your sense of fairness and respect for the freedoms that we cherish in Victoria, we ask you to please consider these reports and urge that you add your weight to the campaign for stopping these demeaning atrocities to human life and Christian endeavor."

Salvation Army chief on visit

The Salvation Army's international secretary for America and Australia visited Victoria this week.

Commissioner (Dr.) Harry Williams, an officer with the army for more than 40 years, spent 30 years in four of the Salvation Army's major hospitals in India.

Elected a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons, Edinburgh, in 1947, he subsequently trained as a plastic surgeon under the guidance of Sir Archibald McIdoe of New Zealand. In 1970 he was awarded an OBE for his pioneer work on leprosy cases.

Imadene celebrating 50 years of camping

Campers and workers from the past 50 years of Camp Imadene on Maple Bay will take part in the half-century celebrations at the camp next weekend.

According to David Waldie of the Camp Imadene Society, most of the 20,000 campers in that time have been from Vancouver Island and the Vancouver area.

Many of them will be returning for the following anniversary events:

- Concert of classical and sacred music, 8:15 p.m. Friday, June 18.
- Cold plate supper in new dining hall, 5 p.m. Saturday, June 19, followed by another concert at 7:30 p.m.
- Public service of thanksgiving and praise at 2:30 p.m. Sunday, June 20, followed by afternoon tea at 4 p.m.

The camp will be open to visitors from 2:30 p.m. Friday till 5:30 p.m. Sunday.

The 13 Christian Assemblies (Gospel Halls) which support and operate Camp Imadene are located from Victoria to Courtenay and in Powell River.

The camp has grown from a start in 1926 with 16 girls spending one week in an old boat works building to its present program which accommodates 1,000 campers a year.

Lenore Rice was the first camp director. Now retired in England, she will be on hand for the celebration.

Mr. and Mrs. Huron Sheppard took over from Miss Rice in 1936 and continued to run the camp until they retired in 1971. Full time work at the camp was then carried on until 1974 by Mr. and Mrs. Jon Taylor who had worked as assistants to the Sheppards.

Present full-time workers are Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Dawes. The Sheppards, the Taylors and the Dawes will all attend next weekend's events.

During the summer there are three camps of boys, three for girls, one for midteens and one for late-teens and 20s.

In addition to the usual sports and activities campers are also given basic instruction, guidance and counselling in religious matters.

Perspectives

RELIGION
Editor: Don Gain

A cartoon which appeared in the New Yorker a few years ago depicts the way in which some people have their religion.

A man and a woman, in pyjamas and dressing-gowns are shown in the living room of their house, sipping coffee and reading the weekend newspapers — and, one assumes, getting a touch of religion from the church service coming at them on their television set.

The point of the cartoon is in the presence at the front door, which the man has just opened, of an usher from the church holding out a collection plate in a demanding manner.

Fifteen and 20 years ago we ministers used to tell one another on Monday mornings how big our congregations had been. Now our tendency is merely to tell one another "Good morning" and then in subdued voices say that they just don't come like they used to.

Like other pastors, I worry about church dropouts. For at least 15 years church attendance has been dwindling — although there is some evidnce that the trend may be levelling off and even reversing itself slightly. The five-day work week, which many people now have, with Saturday and Sunday as days of leisure and recreation, is undoubtedly a significant factor here: at least that's what we pastors like to tell ourselves when we are in our moods of self-defensiveness.

The week-end ethos is undoubtedly a factor in declines in attendance at church services, but I have the feeling that it may be of quite minor significance.

In recent discussions with church dropouts and with people who are still fairly regular church attenders I have had my perspectives on the problem adjusted. One dropout complained about the trivialization of church services: he mentioned the gimmickry and forced folksiness of some ministers, and he wondered why they don't concentrate on their most important stock-in-trade, the resources and insights of faith which can help people cope with the confusions and menaces of life today.

A woman who recently transferred from one congregation of her denomination to another told me that she did so simply because her former minister was chatty and superficial in the pulpit whereas her new one obviously took sermon preparation seriously and always gave his hearers something worthwhile to take home. A man who called himself "an occasional worshipper" told me that he thinks that most people who go to church nowadays do so from simple religious motives and that we ministers should recognize that and stop trying to be entertainers with a faintly spiritual accent.

He complained about "cuteness" in worship and he hopes that God has a sense of humor about such things. He added tht he had no objection to a preacher dealing once in a while with a significant social or political issue — but he does wish that he would do his homework before speaking on an issue and try to show faith can help us in facing it.

The only conclusion I can draw from all this is that the church must become more authentically religious if it is to stop and reverse the dwindling process with which it seem to be afflicted.

No charge for recital at church

A recital of vocal and instrumental music will be given at 8 p.m. Wednesday in St. John's Anglican Church, Quadra and Mason.

Performing artists will be Selena James, soprano; James Kennedy on flute and Edward Norman on piano and organ.

One of the highlights of the program will be the Seven Early Songs by Alban Berg. Works by Marcello, Frescobaldi, Lavigne and Leclair from the Baroque era will be performed as well as numbers by Murrill and Koechlin of the present century.

Miss James will sing selections by Handel, Bach and Purcell.

There is no charge for admission.

Churches need more Christians

Christian Scientists from around the world were told this week that the only sufficient response to challenges confronting churches in general and their denomination in particular is "more Christianity."

"Not just the Christianity that acknowledges Jusus as the Saviour," said Lenore Hanks, chairman of the Christian Science board of directors, 'or the Christianity that may be a sort of lip service. But, the Christianity that follows the Christ so closely it adds spiritual dimension to everything we do"

An estimated 10,000-12,000 members of the mother church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass. were on hand to hear the keynote message, including several from Victoria. Many of the denomination's more than 3,000 branches in 57 countries were represented at the 81st annual meeting.

Accounts of healing solely through prayer were shared throughout the meeting. "In Christian Science, Christianity and healing are forever linked," Mrs. Hanks commented. "We can't really have one without the other."

Mrs. Hanks spoke frankly about a decrease in numbers of those in the healing ministry of Christian Science and of the need for strengthening branch church membership in many areas.

Historian Robert Peel recalled to members that Mary Baker Eddy's first address in The Mother Church "didn't indulge in a paean of triumph. Instead she gave them the quiet reminder: 'Christianity is not superfluous. Its redemptive power is seen in sore trials, self-denials, and crucifixions of the flesh. But these come to the rescue of mortals, to admonish them, and plant the feet steadfastly in Christ."

Music, missions service menu

An interdenominational music and missionary service, titled Singspiration, will be held at 8:30 p.m. Sunday in the lower auditorium of Oaklands Chapel, 2706 Ferwood. Leading the singing will be the Sutherland Bible Chapel choir of North Vancouver. Missionary Norman Harrison will tell of his work in Ethiopia.

Open house marks Buddha's birthday

Victoria's Buddhist community will celebrate the birthday of Buddha with an open house at 1 p.m. today at the Buddist Centre, 26 Lewis Street, James Bay.

The afternoon will be spent in celebration with chants and prayers and a special discourse by Lama Tashi Namgyal.

There is a core of about 12 Buddhists in Victoria, according to Ian Johnson, a member of the community. There are also others who are interested in learning about Buddhism, he said.

Today's celebration, called Wesak, is on the day held most sacred by Buddhists, Johnson said. It marks the three most important events of Buddha's life — his birth, enlightenment and his entrance into final Nirvana.

According to Johnson, Buddhism, for many centuries the major religion in Asian countries such as Tibet, Thailand and China, is growing rapidly in Europe and North America.

Open-air services

The 34th year of open-air gospel services in Beacon Hill Park will begin at 7 p.m. Sunday when the First Christian Reformed Church of Victoria conducts the opening service of the summer.

Taking the service will be Rev. Peter DeBruyne. His church's mixed choir, under the direction of William Olivier, will sing and a musical group, The Trust Company, will perform.

The services, sponsored by Park Services Interdenominational, will be held at the Cameron bandshell in the park each Sunday till the end of August.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Astrological Forecast For Sunday, June 13

By Sydney Omarr

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Be aware of opposition, what thoughts might occur to competitors. See in realistic light. Steer clear of delusions, deceptions. Bank on persons with proven abilities, track records. Leave speculative ventures for another time.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Study Aries message for valid hint. Be practical; insist on collateral. Refuse to give up something for nothing. Accent on distance, communication, special studies, unusual reports. Cancer, Aries and Capricorn figure prominently.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): If you are counting on status quo, you could be counted out. The past is finished. Get rid of burdens not rightly your own. Take cold plunge into future. Expand horizons. Be inventive, independent, dare the elements.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Quiet persistence gains more now than flash, arguments, threats. Know it and time your moves. Emphasis on legal documents, partnership, marriage. Leo, Aquarius individuals could be part of scenario. Young person will damage property unless "intelligently restrained."

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Follow through on "inner feelings." You may feel drawn in two directions simultaneously. Go with hunch. Your intuitive intellect is working overtime. Offer unique or special service — it could mark a road to success.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Highlight versatility. Be flexible and display sense of fitness, humor. Creative abilities are spotlighted. Personal magnetism soars. You are applauded, wined and dined. Someone wants something. Ask questions — you deserve honest answers.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Check fine points — and print. Read between the lines. Be thorough. Obtain hint from Virgo message. If practical, you gain. If careless, price can be steep. The choice is your own. Patience is your ally.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Be ready for change, travel, variety. Read and write. Piece together bits of information. You can come up with complete story. Short trip, dealings with close neighbors, relatives — these are on agenda.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Home adjustment, domestic tranquility — these are aims. Means recent family squabble drained you of emotional energy. Now you can come back, make amends, restore harmony. Do it! Accent on finances, locating lost articles, protection of valuables.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Lunar cycle high; timing is on target. Know it and trust judgment, intuition. Popularity increases. Stress initiative, independence, fresh starts, personality and personal appearance. Pisces, Virgo persons are in picture.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Organize priorities. Means find what is important — and keep it. Discard the superflous. You can do it if you start — now! Emphasis on behind scenes planning, some intrigue, a check backstage, a closed-door meeting.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Friend confides problem. Don't cast first stone. Some of your desires coincide with one who is "on the run." Adjustments are necessary. Costs, programs, tax matters, legal rights and permissions are to be seriously considered.

IF JUNE 13th IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you can be rebellious, restless, creative, a threat to traditions. Domestic adjustments, possible residence change featured this year. September and November will be outstanding months. Aquarius, Leo and Scorpio persons play important roles in your life.

Monday, June 14

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Organize — get authorization to invest, start business, embark upon community project. Accept responsibility. Realize, ed or immediately discarded. Face facts and truth will give you strength.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Good Moon aspect coincides now with long-distance communications, finish of project, also, that a relationship is "too strong" to be disregard-gaining of more recognition. Aries, Libra could be in picture. Aggressive associate confesses lack of confidence. Be encouraging without becoming a co-signer!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Highlight creativity, independence, fresh starts, original concepts. Dig deep and you strike pay dirt. Eschew superficial indications. If thorough, you find ways to save and conserve. Tax question will be resolved.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Lie low — let others take lead. Listen and learn. Detect subtle signals. Refuse to be pushed, forced, cajoled into premature stand, action. Emphasis on public relations, publicity, legal ties. If single, maritial status is spotlighted.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Humor, flexibility are twin assets. Know it and chuckle at your own foibles. Some basic matters command attention, but should be no cause for alarm. Gemini, Sagittarius figure prominently. Health, employment, sharing of mutual interests — these are accented.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Greater freedom due — includes ideas, thoughts, actions. You may have to review and revise . . . and finally to tear down for purpose of rebuilding. Stick to style and principles. Aquarius, Taurus, Scorpio could be part of scenario.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Open dialogue with family. Basic security could be at stake. Don't get signals crossed. You can make significant changes which lead to rediscovery of loved ones. Gemini is in picture. Relationship can grow if you so permit.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Emphasis on trips, ideas, relatives, your ability to bring peace within family circle. You could be messenger or emissary — carrying torch of brotherhood in truest sense. You will be given accolade for your role as diplomat.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Emphasis on what you pay, collect, squander, preserve. Key is to hold tight to valuables, to be a shrewd, alert trader. See through attempted sham. Don't fall prey to bogus schemes. Pisces, Virgo figure prominently.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Vitality returns. Enthusiasm is here, too. You are encouraged, complimented — self-esteem is on upswing. Older person pulls strings for you. Key now is to be confident, to assume responsibility and to wisely exercise authority.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Emphasis on how to delineate needs, wishes. Strike home, to heart of matters. Love is very much a part of scenario. You will be warm, alive, needed. Leo, Aquarius individuals could be part of exciting, vibrant scenario!

IF JUNE 14th IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are creative, a teacher, able to put puzzle pieces together, a writer, a person who is alert, nervous, restless and has an insatiable curiosity. Gemini, Virgo persons play important roles in your life. October will see you "coming out" of emotional morass — your life is to undergo dramatic change. You will be stronger, more financially secure.

Charles Can't Come

OTTAWA — Governor-General Jules Leger on the advice of the federal government refused to invite Prince Charles to Winnipeg this September because of a concern not to down-grade the Queen's visit to the Olympics this summer.

This was the main reason given by a Government House spokesman here for the refusal of the governor-general to pass on to Buckingham Palace the invitation of the Wartime Pilots and Observers Association.

The veterans wanted the Prince to take part in their reunion, and passed the invitation through proper channels to the governor-general. However, his secretary, Esmond Butler, wrote to the association that their request was not being passed on.

He also observed that Prince Charles is on active duty with the Royal Navy, in command of a minesweeper and that the veterans' invitation was "a little late."

It is generally the rule, he explained, that invitations of this sort should be issued a year in advance.

AN ANDERSSON SPECIAL

Young Swedish Grandmaster Ulf Andersson has been playing a number of matches in the past year. First he beat the great Danish Grandmaster Bent Larsen, 5½-2½; in January, he beat Nikola Padevski, Bulgarian Grandmaster 2½-1½ and in March lost a very close match against Michael Tal, U.S.S.R., ex-world champion by 3½-4½.

Seven games were drawn. Ulf lost the fifth match game which follows here. He kindly provided us with notes of this loss. (How often does a master annotate a game he has lost? Very rarely!)

Trucks Scaled On the Highway

SASKATOON (CP) — George Dyck has invented a scal that can be installed in roadways to weigh moving vehicles and automatically record and store the results.

Mr. Dyck, manager of central shops in the college of engineering at the University of Saskatchewan, plans to patent the scale for the university.

Tests have shown that the scale can weigh vehicles to an accuracy of plus or minus five per cent at speeds of up to 70 miles an hour and with axle weights of up to 50,000 pounds each.

Although this does not meet the legal requirements for permanent weigh scales for trucks, the scale is close enough to provide data for planning and designing highways by determining the volume of goods being trucked between various centres.

It is als sufficient for The heart of the scale is a single-load cell and associated electronic equipment that senses the axle weights as vehicles pass over it and transmits the data to a temperature-controlled trailer at the side of the road, where the information is recorded on magnetic tape.

About once a month the recorded data are fed into a computer which has been programmed to show the number and types of vehicles that went by, the speeds at which they were travelling, the time of day each passed, and the weight of each, including the number of axles and the individual axle loads.

Weddings

Blades-Zellenskey

St. Mary's Church was the setting for the May 8th, 1976 wedding of Victoria, younger daughter of George and Irene Zellenskey and Michael, younger son of Lillian Blades. The 6 o'clock ceremony was officiated by Archdeacon Jones.

Given in marriage by her parents, the petite bride looked radiant in an elegant empire line gown of crystelle jersey and imported Venice lace in the Lily of the Valley design. It featured a Victorian neckline, bishop sleeves and full chapel train. A fingertip veil of illusion tulle misted down from her Mantilla of matching Venice lace. Her jewellery was a pearl and diamond pendant and earrings, a gift of her godmother Mrs. Nadia Ognistoff at graduation. For something old the bride wore her great grandmother's diamond ring. She carried a cascade and shower of Baccara roses, baby's breath, plumbosa fern surrounded by Lily of the Valley. Maid of Honour Tina Zellenskey, sister of the bride, and bridesmaids Mrs. Jann Belcher, Mrs. Pam Henson, Mrs. Susan Archibald and Mrs. Susan Maxwell, sister of the groom, all looked lovely in identical rust colour jersey gowns, crushed cowl necklines, overblouses with long slim sleeves. They carried yellow daisies and bronze mums with baby's breath and fern, surrounded by Talisman ribbon. They wore the same flowers in their hair. The attendants wore sterling silver necklaces, gift of the bride. Flower girl, Janice Schlaeger, niece of the bride, carried a basket of the same flowers as the bridesmaids. She looked adorable in the same colour and material accented with white lace around her neckline, bodice, and skirt — the dress made by the bride. Tony Castorena, nephew of the bride, was the ring-bearer, looking very smart in a brown tuxedo. Jim Blades, brother of the groom, was best man, and ushers were Darryl Howe, Bob Belcher, Pat Griffin and Douglas Archibald. They were all attired in brown tuxedos and beige ruffled shirts. The groom chose a beige tuxedo with brown trim and vest, ruffled beige shirt, and boutonniere of baccara rose and three lily of the valley. The mother of the bride was tastefully attired in a sleeveless floor length gown, empire style of pale beige silk crepe. The bodice was delicately beaded in green and clear crystals, pinned with a green orchid. The groom's mother wore a very pretty blue chiffon long gown with a yellow orchid. Flowers were artistically done by Valerie Jacob.

A reception was held at Cedar Hill Community Centre where Boris Netupsky, long time friend, proposed a toast to the bride. Telegrams were from points as far away as the U.S.S.R., France and Australia, and were read by the best man. Mr. and Mrs. Zellenskey and Mrs. Lillian Blades received the guests and Susan Millar took charge of the Guest Book. After a buffet dinner, the 250 guests enjoyed dancing to Denny's Canned Music. On a separate table, the bridal cake of all white roses and Lily of the Valley with just a touch of fresh green leaves, was fashioned after Lady Windemere design. Five small cakes each topped by a large fragile pure white filigree butterfly set off the three larger tiers above, topped by the largest laciest butterfully ever. Tiny little sugar doves nestled in the roses below. Our thanks to Marjorie Maxwell.

For her going away outfit Vicky chose a yellow, white and orange tulip design cotton knit three-piece suit, shirt jacket, swinging skirt and a sleeveless blouse, with a yellow orchid in her hair. Michael was very smart in a tailored Christian Dior brown suit. The bride presented her mother with her bouquet, and just threw her showers, that was caught by Susan Millar and the garter by Paul Turje. The couple said their goodbyes to the music of the Hawaiian Wedding Song — where they spent their two-week honeymoon.

Out of town guests were Mr. and Mrs. Schlaeger and family, New York, Mrs. Glenn and Mr. and Mrs. Castorena and family from Los Angeles, Mr. and Mrs. Vroman and Mrs. Beckrich from Seattle. Mr. and Mrs. Gartenstein and family from Australia Mr. and Mrs. Guthrie, Okanagan, Mr. and Mrs. Sirk, Fairfax, California. From Vancouver — Mr. and Mrs. Boris Netupsky and Monica, Mr. and Mrs. Ognistoff, Mr. and Mrs. A. Netupsky, Mr. and Mrs. W. Mari, Irene so kindly consented to do some photography even though they were leaving for Paris the following morning. Mrs. Gellen, Mr. and Mrs. Boxer, Mr. and Mrs. Vorontsoff, Mr. and Mrs. Coblenz, Dr. and Mrs. Mari, Mrs. Clara Yacub — a very special thanks to her for attending, Mr. and Mrs. Holden, Mr. and Mrs. Hannan, Mr. and Mrs. Lowell Langette, Mrs. Norman Blades of White Rock.

GREEN FEE HIKE BRINGS PROTEST

He also told the Times on Friday he objected to the fact that the fees were raised during a secret meeting of council on Monday.

The fees were raised at a closed meeting which followed the regular council meeting. Noel had left before the closed meeting was finished.

He learned of the increases through a Times story, following a press conference on Tuesday morning in which Frank Keeling announced that weekday green fees will go from $4 to $5 while weekends it will be $6 instead of $5, beginning July 1.

"I've nurtured that golf course since its beginnings and I'm dead against the increases. They're far too high for a municipal golf course," Noel said.

Under the Municipal Act, matters of personnel and land acquisition may be settled in in-camera council meetings.

Noel said raising the green fees did not come under such categories and should not have been dealt with behind closed doors.

City Music Students Tops in Province

The University of Victoria Department of Music and the Conservatory of Music, which is an affiliate, are feeling a justifiable glow of pride this week.

All nine of the students who took top places in the Provincial Music Festival finals at Prince George are students at one or other or both institutions.

White and Margison do their practical work at the Conservatory with Sydney Humphreys and Selena James. The three winners will now go on to compete at the National Finals held in Toronto in August.

All these students also did exceptionally well in this year's Victoria Music Festival. First-year student Margison was the Rose Bowl winner and other UVic-Conservatory students who were award winners were May-Ling Kwok, Arne Sahlen, Linda Gould and Gary Russell. Philip Brown from UVic's percussion studio, shared the Victoria Symphony Society scholarship with Sandra Pumfrey.

Regional Prosecutors Appointed

Richard Anthony, 37, former chairman of the Alberta alcohol and drug abuse commission and chief prosecutor in Edmonton, will join the Capital Region prosecution staff July 1, chief prosecutor J. W. Anderson of Victoria announced Friday.

Anderson also said a prosecutor from the Chilliwack area, Robert Mulligan, will transfer to Victoria later in July to complete replacement of several prosecutors who have decided recently to go into private practice.

Anthony, a native of Winnipeg, was called to the bar in 1962 and spent seven years a chief prosecutor in Edmonton. He led the Alberta alcohol and drug abuse commission for two years and is still president of the Canadian Foundation on Alcohol and Drug Dependencies.

He was a founder of the impaired-driver course which Alberta pioneered in 1969 and has since spread to other provinces, including B.C., and also emphasized court counsellors for cases involved alcohol and drug problems.

Flying Radar In Doubt

BRUSSELS (Reuter) — NATO's most ambitious joint project — mounting a fleet of flying radar stations over western Europe — appeared headed for a crash landing Wednesday as alliance countries were reported losing interest in the idea because of its mammoth cost.

Informed sources at a meeting of defence ministers of NATO's "Eurogroup" said only Britain and West Germany appeared interested in continuing the project sponsored by the United States. The Eurogroup is composed of all European NATO countries except France, Portugal and Iceland.

The sources said that the main stumbling block was money. Depending on the number of planes bought, NATO would be required to pay up to $5 billion over the next 20 years to buy and maintain the system.

The only plane now under consideration is the American Airborne Warning and Control System (AWACS), a humpbacked Boeing-707 filled with the most modern electronic equipment.

The U.S. has proposed that NATO buy 32 of the special Boeings for $2.2 billion.

NATO has agreed that an Airborne Early Warning (AEW) system is needed to detect low-flying Soviet fighter planes dodging in under NATO's ground-based radars, which are blind to aircraft flying below 5,000 feet and in some areas under 10,000 feet.

Mine Strike In Cassiar Threatened

CASSIAR (CP) — Members of the United Steelworkers at the asbestos mine in this northern B.C. community said they will close the mine on June 23 unless they meet with the company to renew contract talks on June 21 and 22.

Bob York, president of Local 6536, said the company wage and benefit offers were not good enough and as a result, a notice was being sent to all employees advising them of the request for a new meeting with the company June 21.

Workers voted 97.2 per cent Wednesday night to reject the latest contract package from the company.

20 Cars Destroyed

NEW YORK (AP) — Four youths who staged a demolition derby early Friday were charged with the destruction of 20 cars worth $50,000. Police said two of the boys, both 16, were charged with criminal mischief, unauthorized use of an automobile and reckless endangerment. The other two, both 14, were charged with juvenile delinquency.

$30,000 Units for Sick Games Visitors

OTTAWA (CP) — Health department officials Friday unveiled the three special isolation units they will use to treat visitors to Canada during the Olympic Games who are found to be suffering rare contagious diseases.

The $30,000-a-piece units, developed in Britain by Vickers Medical, The Royal Veterinary College and the National Research Development Council, are being set up at the defence department hospital here.

A health department official said Ottawa was chosen because it was the halfway point between Montreal, Kingston, Ont. and Toronto where most of the Olympic competitions are being held. There will be a few Olympic events in Ottawa.

The main feature of the isolation units, which are covered by a plastic film, are special arm sections built into the plastic coating that allows medical personnel to work on the patient while not runnnig the risk of contracting the disease.

The isolation unit circulates air through special filters and has special ports that allow medical equipment and supplies to be put in or removed from the unit.

The main unit is built over a standard hospital bed. There is also a mobile isolation unit which the patient can move into directly from the main unit to be transported through the hospital to the operating room if surgery is required. There is a special surgery unit as well.

The health department spokesman said that if more than three people required isolation treatment, then hospital authorities could be in a difficult position. But as there were only six of the units in existence, Canada had done well.

Special legislation which expires at the end of the year enables health officers to stop people entering Canada for 48 hours while their medical condition is checked.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

Bail was refused Friday in Victoria provincial court by Judge William Ostler for a 17-year-old Saanich resident in a case involving a charge which court observers said had never before been laid in the Victoria area.

Russel Albert Turner, 4182 Oakridge, was charged with failure late Thursday to comply with a condition of release that he maintain an 11 p.m. curfew.

A joint Victoria charge of break-in and theft was read Thursday morning against Turner and another youth. It was remanded one week for further hearing and Ostler allowed Turner's release on his own recognizance in the sum of $500 with the curfew as one condition.

Friday morning, the curfew charge was read to Turner along with a separate charge of possession of marijuana early Friday in Victoria. After a bail hearing, Ostler ordered Turner's detention in custody and remanded both charges to next Friday for further hearing.

Ostler said the good points in the case of John Frederick McKay, 59, were his recent poor health, his age and the fact he had only three convictions recorded against him in the past five years.

But on the bad side was "a very, very long record" of thefts and false pretences dating back to 1937, plus the theft McKay admitted Thursday — $252 taken from The Calgarian Hotel in Calgary July 9, 1971, eight days after he started work as a desk clerk.

Prosecutor Peter Birkett said McKay would be serving time until Nov. 8 on more recent offences and Ostler sentenced McKay to six months starting then.

Two Ganges youths who pleaded guilty May 19 before Ostler to a joint charge of stealing a car May 13 at Ganges were fined $250 each but, from there, the penalties differed.

Robert Alexander McDonald, 19, was also put on probation for six months and ordered to do 50 hours of community-service work. Charles Russell Farina, 19, was put on probation for one year and instructed to do 100 hours of similar work.

Ostler noted the difference was because Farina was on a lengthy term of probation at the time the car was stolen.

Kenneth Leon Washington, 30, a U.S. citizen living in Vancouver, was fined a total of $225 after pleading guilty to a Saanich charge of carrying a concealed and unregistered weapon without a permit April 30 — a .32 calibre, five-shot revolver containing four live rounds. The weapon was confiscated and Washington was barred from possessing any more in Canada for two years. Washington, who is to be deported soon, was allowed to pay the $225 at $75 a month starting July 11.

★ ★ ★

Port Hardy resident Donald Montgomery Fowler, 36, charged Thursday with causing bodily harm with intent to wound June 1 in the Sidney area, chose trial by judge and jury and had his preliminary hearing set by Ostler for Sept. 16. Fowler, arrested after a man suffered a back wound in an altercation on a Sidney wharf, was released on his undertaking to return for the hearing.

★ ★ ★

Lora Petula Johnston, 20, and William John Martin Lozza, 25, both of 1312 Gladstone, chose trial by judge and jury on a joint charge of trafficking in MDA in Victoria county Jan. 5, 1976. Ostler set their preliminary hearing for July 2.

★ ★ ★

Gary Wayne Davis, 18, no fixed address, pleaded guilty to a Colwood charge of stealing $440 from his parents' home June 1 on his first return after leaving home in mid-May. Davis was remanded in custody to June 24 for a pre-sentence report and sentence.

★ ★ ★

In traffic court, Michael James Starck, 21, of 39 Ontario, was found guilty following a trial on a Victoria charge of impaired driving and refusing to take a breath-analysis test March 23. He was sentenced by Judge Blake Allan to 14 days in jail on the first count, to be served intermittently, and a $200 fine on the second.

★ ★ ★

Kenneth Daryl Chalkley, 24, of 3228 Carman, pleaded guilty to a Victoria charge of refusing to take a breath-analysis test Feb. 27 and was sentenced by Allan to 10 days in jail, to be served intermittently, and a $500 fine.

★ ★ ★

In the court section of Judge Harold Alder, a higher-court trial was ordered for Victoria area resident Douglas Peter Harder, 24, after a preliminary hearing of a three-count narcotics charge. Harder was charged with trafficking in MDA and marijuana Oct. 21, 1975, and in marijuana Dec. 10, 1975, in Victoria.

★ ★ ★

Drink-drive fines included a total levy of $500 against Robert William Latimer, 23, of 2607 Fifth, who pleaded guilty to a Saanich charge of impaired driving and refusing to take a breath-analysis test one week ago today.

Robert Ross, 53, of 1115 Princess, pleaded guilty to a Victoria charge of impaired driving Friday and was fined $500.

GARDENING
jack beastall

When we take up gardening as a serious hobby the first thing we look for is a book of basic rules because we are at a loss to know what to do, how and when to do it.

We go to libraries and we search the book stores. We find hundreds of books on horticulture, some general in content, others for specialists, but there never seems to be a book that answers the questions that are racing through the mind.

We usually manage to acquire quite a lot of advice from one source and another, but the more we acquire the more contradictory and confusing it becomes.

It hardly seems reasonable that horticulture, which has been known for centuries and practiced by millions of people, should lack a book of rules for the guidance of its followers, definite rules of what is allowed and what is not allowed, when to take action and when to leave well enough alone.

* * *

The reason we cannot find the book we are seeking is because we are dealing with things which are best described as variables, things that are able to vary, things capable of constant change.

If we had just one variable factor with which to contend we could possibly make necessary allowances, but when we are faced with several factors that change constantly and independently, any rules we may frame will be limited to the conditions prevailing at a given moment. The day before, or the day after, some factors will be different, and to cover such changes the rule can only be phrased in a general way. The more combinations of changes encountered the more vague and general, or the less definite, are the rules we are able to frame.

* * *

The beginner often feels that those with the knowledge are not willing to share all they know. This feeling is brought about because the answers to questions asked are not definite and conclusive.

The most difficult thing to explain to a beginner is that gardening is about 75 per cent instinct, a second sense born of years of experience. The best we can do is acquire all the knowledge we can, regardless of what phase of agriculture or horticulture it concerns, mix this with our own experiences over the years, put it through the strainer of common sense and extract the essence; then put this essence to the best and decide whether it works under our conditions.

One thing the gardener must always keep in mind is the number of variable factors involved when we attempt to grow plants out-of-doors.

First there is the variation in the plants themselves, each one being an individual with its own characteristics regardless of the fact it came from the same seed pod as its neighbor, or from a cutting taken from the same bush. No two plants will respond in exactly the same way to any given treatment, and the more plants you grow of one kind the easier it is to realize the extent of these minor differences.

Soil is the next variable factor with which we have to deal. Aside from the different types of soils, differences exist within a few square feet in every garden.

* * *

Soil is never a stable commodity because it is a living thing the same as a plant, and to maintain life means constant change.

The character of soil changes with the seasons. Soil tests made in March will give quite different readings to those made in July or September. The same is true of soil tests taken at different times on the same day, say 6 a.m., 12 noon and 6 p.m. This is due to the activity of the soil organisms which produce the soil nutrients.

In the early morning the soil is cool and activity is at a minimum, therefore readings are low. By noon on a summer day the top few inches of soil is considerably warmer and more soil organisms are working. By evening the soil is at its highest temperature, millions of organisms are active and test readings are at their peak.

Many beginners feel a soil testing kit is essential to success, but unless the operator has a thorough knowledge of soil, how it is made, and what goes on within the soil at each season as the climate changes and moisture increases or decreases, the readings could be meaningless.

Weather is very important to plant growth. While the climate of any given area is reasonably constant and determines what plants may, or may not be grown, the weather changes every day, and in coastal areas almost every hour. This continual variation must be taken into account when we try to determine why a plant succeeds or fails, and the beginner will find that weather records are more important than sowing dates or fine points of culture.

* * *

The wonderful showing made by our flowering trees and shrubs in any spring is the direct result of the weather experienced during the pervious summer and winter. A heavy set of berries on shrubs and trees in fall is said to portend a severe winter, but the berries are the result of past weather rather than a forecast of future conditions. However, when careful weather records are kept there appears to be a link between the weather that follows and the kind of weather that produced the heavy berry crop. Therefore recognizing prevailing signs can guide the gardener as to what might be ahead.

The moisture in the air, the relative humidity, changes every hour, and each change has an effect on plants, small though it may be at times. Conifers and broadleaved evergreens are damaged locally because gardeners fail to spray them with water during periods of low relative humidity.

* * *

The amount of food contained in the soil in a form plants can use is constantly changing, and each change has an effect on plant growth. It is important to stress "in a form plants can use" because a soil can be rich in plant nutrients but the plants die of starvation because the nutrients are not in the form of nitrates.

Interaction between chemicals, and the state of soil acidity can, as we say, lock up some chemicals and make them unavailable to plants. This is something else that must be understood by the beginner with a soil testing kit.

Soil acidity is another variable which, as mentioned above, affects the availability of plant food and determines the kind of plants which will succeed in the garden. Acid loving plants deteriorate as soil acidity decreases, lime plants as acidity increases.

The ability of a soil to hold moisture is important to good plant growth. When the soil is freshly stocked with humus (well decomposed compost or old manure) its water retaining ability is high. But the humus is converted to plant nutrients by soil organisms and becomes less every day, and the capacity of the soil to retain mositure within the reach of roots gradually decreases.

The gardener has to determine by experiment the amount of humus needed to maintain a state of soil moisture suitable to the plants being grown, and that quantity of humus must be regularly applied to the soil. Low humus content means high water bills and poor plant growth.

These are not all the variables that affect our attempts to grow plants, but are sufficient to show that every instruction and every statement on gardening would have to be carefully qualified before it could be considered a definite rule. Therefore we have no definite rules and we can only speak in widely general terms, hoping the beginner will soon gain enough experience to qualify the advice we offer.

WORK FOR WEEK

By JACK BEASTALL

Thin out dahlia shoots to three for each plant; or one if for exhibition. Thin phlox and aster shoots to three strongest.

Most border chrysanthemums need growth pinched back when it reaches five inches height; allow three strong side branches to come for bearing flowers.

Marguerites also benefit when encouraged to form side shoots.

Sow Wando green peas; they stand hot weather well and are sweet; Sugarpod or Ediblepod peas are splendid vegetable for the pods have all the nutrition in an edible form; pick before peas swell.

Use Broad Beans when beans can just be seen or felt in the pods. Nip out whole top of plant to prevent (or remove) black aphids.

Continue small sowings of vegetables previously put in; make sowing of dwarf and climbing beans this week, should be warm enough for these now. Also radish, early white turnip (for their green tops even more than for the roots), and beets.

Make all these sowings as thinly as possible to give maximum chance of growth in early stages and reduce work of thinning.

Iran Strikes Back At Torture Critics

Washington Post

TEHRAN — Iran is mounting a counterattack against foreign news media for what it considers unjust criticism in reporting guerrilla activities and accounts of torture here.

Iranian authorities also charge that the International Commission of Jurists — which last month issued a report accusing the Iranian state security and intelligence organization, Savak, of systematically torturing political prisoners physically and psychologically — was financed by the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency and thus may be tainted by other "foreign agencies" hostile to Iran.

The commission, a Geneva-based organization of some 45,000 judges, lawyers and law professors, comments on human-rights issues and the rule of law in various countries.

The charge of CIA financing was made last week by Premier Amir Abbas Hoveyda in a news conference and followed up by articles in local government-controlled newspapers.

Hoveyda and the Tehran press cited the book "CIA Diary: Inside the Company" by Philip Agee in saying that the International Commission of Jurists was set up and controlled by the CIA. What Agee actually says is that it was "in part indirectly financed by the CIA in the first decade of its existence."

Hoveyda said the commission is "an organization that has been pushed and controlled by foreign agencies."

Referring to the alleged CIA connection, he asked, "How do you know that it is not receiving money from another country?" He did not name any countries.

Hoveyda said he had only "disdain" for the charges of torture in Iran, but he did not actually deny the allegations at the June 2 news conference.

Radical Right Wing Making Gains Across U.S.

By DANIEL D. HANEY

BELMONT, Mass. (AP) — Matter-of-factly, the radio commentator said: "Regular listeners to these broadcasts will recall your reporter as being the first journalist to reveal that the state of Massachusetts is a Communist front."

Alan Stang was establishing his credentials for a report on the presidential primaries. He went on to identify Senator Henry Jackson of Washington as a militant revolutionary and to state that a socialist conspiracy is trying to take over the government.

Stang makes his living recording daily five-minute broadcasts for the John Birch Society, which claims to be growing faster than at any time since 1964, when Barry Goldwater's presidential candidacy stimulated interest in conservatism.

The Birch Society, which has its headquarters here, says its membership now is between 60,000 and 100,000 (it won't be more precise) and 500 new chapters have been started in the last two years, giving the society a total of 4,000 chapters across the United States.

Birch Society members say the rising interest in the conservative position has given the society new respectability.

"For years, the momentum has been to the left," said John McManus, the society's official spokesman. "In order to reverse that trend and start things going to the right,the anti-Communist position has taken an awful lot of time and effort. We think the momentum is beginning to change."

Stang's daily radio commentaries are an indication of the momentum. Two years ago, 10 stations carried the Stang Report; now there are 107, the society says.

Stang's opinions are extreme. In recent weeks he has reported that:

—Low school reading scores are the result of a Communist conspiracy;

—Forced union membership is an example of both communism and nazism.

—David Rockefeller, president of Chase Manhattan Bank, is "Mao Tse-tung's agent in the United States."

Conspiracy is central to all Stang says. The Birch Society was founded in 1958 on the proposition that a secret conspiracy existed to put the whole world under a totalitarian government. The conspirators include such diverse public figures as Mao, Nixon and Jackson.

Watergate has contributed to their resurgence, Birchers say.

"Watergate put the word conspiracy back into the language," McManus explained. "The American people had been conditioned to run away and hide when they heard the word conspiracy, and of course that's one of our key words. Watergate turned out to be a boost for us."

The society has outgrown its two-storey brick headquarters in Belmont and has spread into two other buildings in this quiet suburb west of Boston.

Inside, fluorescent lights shine austerely on painted cinderblock corridors. The buildings hum with the uncluttered efficiency of a mildly prosperous insurance agency.

But in their way, the Birchers approach their work with the fervor of missionaries. Sometimes they reminisce fondly about their first contacts with the Birch Society. Often, it sounds like religious conversion.

ternational conspiracy they fight began on May 1, 1776, in Bulgaria. The conspirators' symbol was a pyramid capped with an eye, now pictured on the back of the dollar bill.

"The conspiracy that began in 1776 eventually normed a lot of arms," McManus said. "It formed the Communist movement, the socialist movement, the nihilists and anarchists."

The vehicle for world domination—so the Birch theory goes— is the United Nations. The conspirators there decide who will be president and when wars will begin and end.

McManus says the society has exposed many American government leaders as being conspirators. Among them, he named former ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge, former defence secretary Robert McNamara, auto executive Henry Ford II, State Secretary Henry Kissinger, Vice-President Nelson Rockefeller and his brother David.

The Birch Society calls itself an educational organization. Its mission is to tell the world about its theory.

To do this, there is a staff of 240 full-time employees, 20 per cent of them hired in the last five years, the society says.

McNamus said this bureaucracy is supported with members' dues—$24 a year from men and half that for women— and with individual contributions.

The Birch publishing arm, Western Islands, now has 75 books in print. Teddy Bare, a book about Senator Edward Kennedy's car accident at Chappaquiddick, has sold 350,000 copies, the society said.

These and other right-wing pamphlets, bumper stickers, tape recordings and records are sold in the society's 400 American Opinion bookstores. The stores are operated as franchises.

The society sponsors 20 speakers who travel around the country giving addresses in opposition to gun control, President Ford's foreign policy and the Equal Rights Amendment.

There is a monthly bulletin and two news magazines, the monthly American Opinion and the weekly Review of the News. In the last two years, the review has added 20,000 subscribers and now goes to 50,000 persons, McManus said.

Three years ago, the society started a weekly column called The Birch Log. It now appears in 140 newspapers, most of them weeklies.

This summer, 2,000 teenagers are to attend week-long programs at 10 Birch-sponsored summer camps scattered around the country. The first camp opened five years ago.

Regionally, the society is weakest in New England and strongest in the Rocky Mountain states, especially Utah.

The people who join are basically middle class, Birchers said. There are more physicians in the society than any other profession.

"The common denominator for the Bircher is somebody who thinks in terms of absolutes," said McMannus. "It may be a truck driver or a businessman. There is a lot more black and white in our lives. We think there is too much grey in the way other people see things."

Witness Dies

TOKYO (WP) — Japan's slow-moving probe of the Lockheed bribery scandal met another setback this week with the death of a key witness.

Businessmen Taro Fumuda, 59, who died from cirrhosis of the liver in a Tokyo hospital has been intensively questioned by police on meetings between Lockheed executives and ultra-rightist Yoshio Kodaha at which he was the interpreter.

His death was reported as a shock to Tokyo prosecutors who have charged Kodama with tax evasion and foreign exchange violation on multi-million dollar payments from Lockheed.

Fumuda, who was admitted to the hospital soon after the scandal broke in early February, has been questioned more than 20 times.

Fumuda had admitted introducing J. W. Clutter, former director of Lockheed's Tokyo office, to Kodama and acting as interpreter when the two men negotiated a secret consultancy agreement.

OBSTRUCTION CHARGES LAID

Police Grab 32 Pickets In Dawn Raid at Kitimat

KITIMAT (CP) — Thirty-two men, including Peter Burton, local president of the Canadian Association of Smelter and Allied Workers, were charged today with obstruction after about 100 RCMP forcibly removed the union's picket line at the Aluminum Company of Canada's smelter operation.

The police, complete with riot gear and dogs, moved in at 5:45 a.m. when the picket line was down to a minimum number of men and took them to Terrace in a bus.

The arrests were peaceful and without incident.

Police took the places of the union members and were not letting anyone in or out of the smelter plant.

The pickets were charged with obstructing, interrupting or interfering with the lawful use, enjoyment or operation of property.

In Victoria, RCMP Chief Superintendent Marvin Marcus said some members of the force have been alerted to be transferred to Kitimat should the situation warrant it.

In a separate development, delegates at the NDP convention in Penticton voted today to demand that 'the immediate injustices suffered by Alcan employees and other groups of workers at the hands of the Anti-Inflation Board be rectified."

The delegates also voted to take up a collection for the legal defence of the arrested workers.

Former NDP labor minister Bill King said he regrets the Alcan dispute resulted in arrests. He said however, that when tempers have cooled the workers will realize defiance of the law isn't going to help their cause.

The strikers appeared to be strengthening their picket lines late Friday, blocking the highway leading to the Anderson Creek bridge with rows of cars.

Union local president Peter Burton was calling on members to refrain from violence and if arrested to go quietly. He also asked that all children at the site be taken back to the town, seven miles away.

The ranks of workers and supervisory staff, who continue to operate the smelter, were thinned by about 60 persons Friday night when the union refused to allow employees back into the plant after they crossed picket lines to attend a funeral.

About 740 Alcan employees, most of them supervisory staff, were believed still inside the plant today.

Three busloads were allowed to leave the plant and cross picket lines at about 10 a.m. Friday to attend the funeral of Kevin Rooney, 35, an employee who died earlier this week inside the smelter from a suspected heart attack.

The agreement with pickets stipulated that the employees would recross the picket line at 4:30 p.m.

Jets Cross Border

Rhodesian air force jet fighters flew across the Mozambique border on Thursday to destroy mortar positions and an ammunition dump, according to The Herald.

The newspaper quotes Rhodesian residents near the border as saying the air strike followed a three-hour rocket and mortar attack on a Rhodesian tea plantation by forces of the Felimo party in Mozambique.

But it said only that the Rhodesian forces took "appropriate retaliatory action." It gave no details of the action nor said who was responsible for the firing from Mozambique.

The official communique said 11 nationalist guerrillas have been killed since Thursday.

Price Rise Slowing —AIB

OTTAWA (CP) — The anti-inflation board said Friday the rate of increase in food prices has slowed since the period measured by Statistics Canada, which reported Thursday that food prices in May had jumped 1.5 per cent from the previous month.

W. W. Lasby, the head of the board's food price monitoring division, released a statement saying the board's predictions in late April about expected food price increases may have been somewhat high.

Statistics Canada reported that the food price increase in May—primarily a one-month jump of 12.4 per cent in beef prices—was the major factor in pushing the consumer price index up by nine-tenths of one per cent, the sharpest jump in six months.

Since May 7, the board survey showed that the beef prices for example had increased by only one-tenth of one per cent and were running about three per cent below the level a year ago.

Welfare Loss Fear Her Road to Death?

By PAUL NICHOLSON
Times Staff

A 58-year-old Victoria woman who died this week may have taken her own life because of constant worry that she was about to be cut off her welfare incentive program.

Mrs. Honor Eastman died Thursday two hours after she was hit by a car in the 3200-Block Cedar Hill Road — about two blocks from her home at 3020 Cedar Hill.

A number of workers at the Victoria Community Action Advocacy who worked with Mrs. Eastman feel certain her death was the result of her increasing fear of money problems related to the welfare program — and they have a fair bit of circumstantial evidence to back up their beliefs.

Saanich police said driver David Henry Paterson of 1667 Freeman told them she seemed to move quickly into the path of his car at 7:49 p.m.

About 10 minutes earlier, further south on Cedar Hill in Victoria, there was another incident involving Mrs. Eastman and another car.

She was either brushed by the car or fell down as it passed.

The driver stopped and offered assistance, but she said she was all right and continued walking north to where she died moments later.

Mrs. Eastman was on welfare receiving $160 a month. Through the incentive program where she spent 40 hours a month working at the community action advocacy, she earned another $100 per month.

Last August incentive program rules changed to allow persons community service work for only six months.

Early this year, Mrs. Eastman received a six-month extension but as time began to run out she became increasingly worried and depressed, says Susan Talbot, co-ordinator of projects for the community group and a close friend of Mrs. Eastman.

"She was under a constant worry that the extra $100 could be cut off at any time," Talbot said in an interview Friday.

Mrs. Eastman had recently been treated for stress at the Eric Martin Institute "because of the terrible fears descending on her," Talbot said.

She said the woman's husband is receiving a disability pension and cannot work at a regular job. The additional $100 a month was important to them.

About a month ago, Talbot said, Mrs. Eastman came to her and said: "Susan, I want you to have my daughter's address and phone number in case something should happen to me. I know you'll make sure something's done."

Talbot said she said to her not to be silly, but Mrs. Eastman replied, "You never know."

About three weeks ago Mrs. Eastman visited her daughter in Calgary for two weeks and then a week ago she had her will drawn up through the community service offices.

The night Mrs. Eastman went on her fatal walk she left lying on a table some forms that had to be filled out regarding the annual application for welfare for the handicapped.

Talbot said the woman had told her she had been afraid to fill out the forms—saying she was terrified she and her husband wouldn't qualify.

"Many others are living under fear and intimidation imposed on them by government regulations," Talbot said.

"Do we have to have a death to bring it to a head? Can't we educate the government before tragedy happens?" she asked angrily.

"These people are literally dying day by day. Honor (Eastman) started dying months ago."

Talbot feels there should be no time limit on the incentive programs.

Every six months there should be an evaluation of the incentive worker by the employer and social worker, but there should be provision for continuation if all agree it is necessary, she said.

That would get people out from under the terrible fear that the end of the incentive money is coming.

"It's easy for the government to take it away, but they don't offer any alternative," she said.

An inquest into the death has not been called, but city coroner Edmond Jorre de St. Jorre is conducting an inquiry.

High-Sounding Phrases, Sour Notes, End Habitat

VANCOUVER (CP) — The United Nations Habitat conference ended Friday with high-sounding phrases about the value of international co-operation.

But, there also were bitter expressions of regret that political disagreements had divided the two-week international conference on human settlements in its final hours.

The Vancouver Declaration of Human Settlements, 1976, was prepared by a group of Third World nations earlier in the week. It had been the subject of frantic negotiations during the last five days as delegates tried to reach compromise wording on 13 of its 62 clauses.

Most offensive to the western bloc that opposed it were references to a resolution passed by the UN General Assembly last November equating Zionism with racism and a number of clauses demanding more control of resources for developing nations.

In the end, no compromise wording was reached despite meetings that often ran into the early hours of the morning.

The vote was 89-15 at the main plenary session in favor of the resolution with 10 abstentions. The Latin American, African, Asian, Arab and communist nations combined against Canada, the United States, Israel and the western European nations.

BOY, 7, CHARGED

EDMONTON (CP) — Police said today a seven-year-old boy has been charged in the death of Christopher Templar, 2⅛, whose body was found in a pond at the bottom of a ravine near his home.

Staff Insp. W. H. Stewart of the criminal investigation division told a news conference the charge against the boy, whose name was not released, was laid late Friday after the body of the Templar child was found.

The child, who disappeared Thursday evening, had been the object of a 25-hour search in the northeast area of the city which involved more than 140 volunteers and police, a Canadian Forces helicopter and tracking dogs.

Insp. Stewart said the same boy, charged with murder punishable by life imprisonment, had been involved in a recent incident in which a three-year-old boy had been beaten ando pushed down the same ravine.

Cardiac Patients Safer at Home—Report

By STUART AUERBACH
Washington Post

BOSTON — Flying in the face of the usual medical practice in North America, a British study has found that more patients survive heart attacks if they are treated at home than if they are hospitalized.

The study, published in a recent issue of the British Medical Journal, concluded that the stress of the specialized cardiac care units — where patients are hooked up to sophisticated monitors that keep constant check on heart actions — might further weaken the heart and be responsible for the extra deaths.

The British findings have sparked a controversy among experts in the U.S., where most heart attack patients routinely are sent to cardiac care units.

"To send a patient home here would almost be grounds for a malpractice suit," said Dr. Raymond Neutra, a Harvard medical school specialist who conducted a seminar here on the study this week.

The controversy arises at a time of increased concern, recently expressed in Ivan Illich's book "The Medical Nemesis," that the U.S. is becoming an over-medicated society.

During a visit to Washington last week, Illich, a social philosopher, met officials of the department of health, education and welfare to expound his view that some of the techniques of modern medicine may be doing more harm than good.

The British study, headed by Dr. H. G. Mather of Southhead hospital in Bristol, would seem to back that view.

The doctor there compared 450 men at four medical centres. Matched according to age and severity of heart attacks, half were admitted to hospital coronary care units, the other half treated at home.

At the end of 330 days — almost a year — the death rates were 20 per cent among the patients treated at home, 27 per cent among the patients who had been hospitalized.

(Patients judged on first examination to have suffered an extremely severe attack and hospitalized were excluded from the study.)

Older patients, those over 60, did far better at home than in the hospital — a surprising finding since they

PRAYERS FAIL DIABETIC

DAWSON CREEK (CP) — An inquest has been called June 26 into the death of a known diabetic, Patty Ann Sargeant, 19, who during a testimonial service at the Parkhill United Pentecostal Church June 1, said she felt the Lord had healed her — then stopped her daily insulin injections.

Mrs. Sargeant, a resident of Dawson Creek for the last year, was dead when taken to Dawson Creek and District Hospital at 12:25 a.m. Sunday.

J. W. Brand, pastor at the church and a long-time friend of Mrs. Sargeant, was called by Mrs. Sargeant's sister early Saturday morning and told she was not feeling well.

The congregation, on the way to a scheduled Saturday evening prayer meeting, went to the pastor's house where Mrs. Sargeant was.

Brand said the congregation knelt down to pray when Mrs. Sargeant died.

He said Mrs. Sargeant came back to life twice after he prayed at her side for a span of several seconds.

Syria Agrees To Pullout

Times News Services

Syria agreed today to lift its siege of Beirut and pull its troops out of Lebanon, a Palestine guerrilla communique said.

Libya's premier said Libyan troops have entered the embattled Lebanese capital as the first unit of a Pan-Arab peace-keeping force.

The Palestinian statement, reported in Cairo, came from Fatah, the largest guerrilla group led by Yasir Arafat. It said the withdrawal of the 12,500 Syrian troops in Lebanon will be accomplished in two stages within 10 days of the agreement's implementation.

The statement, carried by Egypt's Middle East News Agency, did not say when the accord will go into effect but it said a ceasefire was also arranged.

The statement said the Sidon-Arboun road will be opened to food caravans. Syrian forces cutting off Beirut have confiscated all food and fuel supplies to the capital.

The accord was reached between Salah Khalaf for the Palestinian-leftist Moslem alliance in Lebanon, and Maj. Gen. Nagui Gamie, Syrian deputy defence minister, the statements said.

News of the accord was released in Cairo, but the talks apparently took place in Damascuus.

Libya's Premier Abdul Salam Jalloud said the Libyan troops were trying to separate fighting Syrian and Palestinian forces.

'No-Fault' Divorce Planned

TORONTO (CP) — The federal cabinet plans to introduce "no-fault divorce" in which marriage breakdown will become the sole grounds, according to The Globe and Mail.

In a front-page story from Ottawa by reporter William Johnson, the newspaper says the cabinet has approve the measure and described it to the Liberal caucus Wednesday of this week. It adds that Justice Minister Ron Basford will outline it at a federal-provincial conference in Vancouver next week.

"But the timing of the legislation to implement the still-secret proposals has not been decided," the story says. "Some people in the cabinet and caucus fear a backlash against the divorce reform and want it put off until the public has simmered down over two current reforms before Parliament—the abolition of capital punishment and the licensing of guns."

Cabinet sources in Ottawa were not immediately available for comment. Basford was in Vancouver Friday night attending the Habitat conference.

Barrett's Still In Driver's Seat

Barrett, nominated by Karen Sanford, NDP MLA for Comox, was to address delegates at the party's 16th annual convention later today.

Harold Steeves, former NDP MLA for Richmond, was nominated to challenge incumbent party president Yvonne Cocke in elections to take place later today.

More than 700 cheering, hand-clapping, table-pounding delegates welcomed Barrett and national NDP leader Ed Broadbent to the convention's official opening session.

Barrett threatened to upstage Broadbent's key-note address when the delegates twice rose to give him standing ovations for his introduction of the national party chief.

Broadbent stuck close to his theme of economic incompetence in Prime Minister Trudeau's federal government, but widened his attack to include Opposition leader Joe Clark.

"He doesn't just go back into the 19th century," Broadbent said of Clark's economic thinking. "He goes back to Adam Smith in the 18th century."

The delegates were in a receptive mood after hearing a report from party president Vyonne Cocke that membership rolls had swelled to the 25,000 mark, an increase of about 10,000 from this time last year.

"This makes the B.C. NDP the biggest in Canada, outstripping Saskatchewan and Ontario," the wife of former NDP health minister Dennis Cocke told the crowd.

The increased membership has also opened up delegate eligibility quotas and more than 800 delegates had registered by 7 p.m. Friday, with more to arrive today and Sunday. Making this convention the largest in the B.C. party's history.

Mrs. Cocke told the delegates that Bob Williams,

Savage lines up donor days

Did you know that duelling is legal in Uruguay provided both parties in the dispute are registered blood donors??

Well, it's true. I read it in the Times not too long ago — a one-paragraph UPI story from Montevideo.

And now that little gem of nonsense helps Gerry Savage out whenever people ask him: "Why should I give blood?"

Of course, Gerry Savage, supervisor of the Red Cross blood donor clinic in Victoria, has plenty of other reasons why people should give blood.

Apart from gratification received from the act of giving ("Your blood the gift of life" is the Red Cross slogan), there is always the possibility that some day you or someone in your family might need a transfusion.

"You will never know when you may need help from the blood bank," Gerry points out, "but the blood bank knows when it needs help from you — and that's right now."

It's all a question of the economic situation encroaching on the fight to save lives; but the last time a series of clinics were held on the Lower Island officials found themselves 355 pints short of their target. That's a lot of blood, and the Red Cross is starting to feel the pinch.

Donor clinics are held here normally for a week and it's usually in the third week of each month.

It's our turn again next week and Gerry hopes something like 1,300 pints will be collected this time.

(Clinic times are 2:30 to 8 p.m. next Monday and Tuesday at Red Cross House, 1046 Fort Street; 9 a.m. to noon and 1:15 p.m. to 3:30 p.m. Wednesday at HMCS Naden, Building 33; and 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Thursday and Friday for the Parliament Buildings at Newcombe Auditorium). All of the clinics are open to the public.

A team of nurses, aides, technicians and drivers from the provincial blood bank in Vancouver come over to conduct the sessions but Savage needs a lt of help from his secretary and a squad of volunteers to be able to conduct between 60 and 70 clinics a year in his area south of the Malahat.

If you have never given blood, or even if you've been a casual donor, you may wonder what happens to it once it's left your arm.

It is, says Gerry, collected in plastic bags and taken to the blood bank in Vancouver. From there it goes to the laboratory where it's checked for anti-bodies and for diseases like hepatitis and malaria.

"The safest blood in the world comes out of a Canadian blood bank," he points out, adding that a 1971 report in the United States (where, of course, many people sell rather than donate their blood) said a patient undergoing open-heart surgery and requiring a transfusion had a 51-per-cent chance of getting hepatitis.

"Last year in B.C., there were 35,000 patients who received blood transfusions and there were only five cases of hepatitis," says Gerry, "and no one's even sure that those were related to the transfusions."

After being tested, the blood goes into cold storage and from there it's distributed to every hospital in the province.

There are four main blood groups, says Gerry, and most people are Group O. Of those, most are O Positive and the rest are either negative or positive strains of Groups A, B and AB. But there are also at least 190 rare blood groups in storage at the bank.

★ ★ ★

"One group is so rare that there are believed to be only two people in Canada who have it—and they are brother and sister," says Gerry.

As well as the blood bank, hospitals here can also call on people on the Red Cross' list of about 200 emergency donors.

But, although you may give blood free, the costs involved to the transfusion service are rising all the time.

In 1973, the cost of collecting, processing and shipping one pint (actually, it's not quite a pint but 450 cc., insists Gerry) of blood was $10.70. And the projected cost for this year: $30 a pint!

Coupled with these increased costs, the B.C. and Yukon Division of the Red Cross has had it's budget cut considerably. (What hasn't?). And now, instead of the former custom of sending out cards reminding regular donors of the coming clinics, Gerry has a number of women volunteers going through the list and phoning everyone.

"With higher costs and budget cuts, there's only one way out: I've got to get more donors into fewer clinics," explains Gerry. "This helps make the cost per-pint much lower.

"That's the aim of the game—to collect your maximum amount of blood in the minimum amount of time. If we don't make it, then the teams come off the road. And then we won't have blood at all. I refuse to contemplate after that—it just can't happen."

★ ★ ★

To keep the blood transfusion service in operation, some 2,500 pints have to be donated each week in B.C. That's where the projected target bit comes in as the Red Cross knows what each area will need and what the donors in that area, hopefully, are willing to give.

"Last year, we collected 400 points more than we used in the two hospitals in Victoria," says Gerry. "But that's the first time in at least 20 years that the Lower Island has collected enough blood to support its own hospitals. Before that, we were a kept city."

The supervisor is confident people here will continue to increase their support. The service has operated since its foundation in 1947 despite the fact that less than five per cent of Canadians are blood donors.

But your blood, is indeed, "the gift of life."

"Science has made leaps and bounds in surgery," says Gerry. "Science can do a lot of things, but it can't make blood.

Harborside Huckstering Hotel Fear

By PAUL MOSS

Times Staff

Empress Hotel manager Ted Balderson has expressed concern to Victoria city council about a possible renewal of "huckstering" on the Causeway by tour bus operators.

His letter to council makes no mention of Marguerite Tours Ltd., the new company which plans to operate four streetcar-type buses in competition with several government-owned bus lines. But it is clearly a broadside aimed at the venture involving ex-MLAs Jim Gorst and Gordon Dowding.

Balderson points out that the Empress spends a great deal of moey to attract visitors to Victoria, adding: "We naturally frown on excessive noise on the Causeway and are particularly upset when our guests complain of being pestered by sightseeing and attraction hucksters."

He says the problem was eliminated in 1974 (when the last privately-owned companies were brought up by the government). And last year, in his first year as manager, he found the Gray Line operations and the double-decker buses "aesthetically compatible with our facilities."

But Balderson argues that all concerned should be trying to make Victoria's tourist industry a year-round industry. Gray Line has co-operated fully with the Empress in this respect, he says, but he cannot become enthusiastic about "operators who move in for the choice summer season to take the 'cream' off the top."

His letter concludes: "I respect the decisions of city council but would like to recommend, on behalf of the Empress Hotel, that additional sightseeing conveyances not be allowed to display and sell their services on the Causeway."

The only "additional" tour buses expected to be operating in the area this summer are the mock-trolleys of Marguerite Tours.

Gorst said earlier this week the company was only about 10 days away from launching the business.

City council took the view recently that it has no legal grounds to prevent the company from using the Causeway while at the same time it allows the government's companies to park there.

But Mayor Mike Young warned Gorst and Dowding that if there is any trouble from aggressive competition between private enterprise and government, all the vehicles will be removed.

What Fire? About Turn!

Where's the fire, a Saanich family wondered, drawn outside their home to see what all the sirens were about Friday afternoon.

"Look behind you," they were told by assistant fire chief Cliff Button who had just roared up their driveway in a department car. "Your roof's on fire."

Firefighters on the following trucks quickly extinguished the blaze at the home of Fred Jordan, 4183 Douglas, confining the fire to a small section of the roof.

Button said sparks from a fireplace started the fire which burned about a four-foot section of roof and attic causing a few hundred dollars damage to the older frame house.

Te fire was reported by a caller several blocks away who told the departent she saw smoke coming from the roof of a house and it didn't look right."

Button said he didn't have an exact address, but he quickly found the burning house and the surprised family.

Leaf Miner Hits Victoria

Widespread damage to Victoria's ornamental conifers by the cypress leaf miner—an insect which bores holes in needles of the evergreen trees—is reported by provincial entomologists.

Chet Neilson said the infestation has been buildiing up in the past two years and seems to be nearing its peak this spring.

"I've received a lot of complaints," he said. "The pests are mainly attacking two species—Thuja and chamaecyparis."

The insect in June is a moth and lays its eggs on the needles of trees which later in the season hatch out into tiny worms and start feeding ont the conifers.

The Potlatch Is a Kacklam

The organizer of an ongoing Indian festival at the Esquimalt reserve has bowed to the wishes of Indians to drop the name of "potlatch" for his native dance show.

Al Poelzer of Kitimat, said the name of his dance festival held in the Esquimalt reserve longhouse has been changed to Kacklam — meaning coming out feast or festival.

The dance festival is to be held continuously through the summer.

Margaret Vickers of Kitkatla, a Tsimshian, who is Vancouver Island chairman of the B.C. Native Teachers Association, said she saw the performance and agrees it is not a potlatch.

She explained a potlatch is given for a specific reason, such as a marriage, a memorial or to pass on names and traditions to a member of a family.

POELZER
. . . he's un-Indian

"All invited persons to a potlatch receive gifts," she said. "The people are fed by the host and, of course, are not required to pay."

She said at the Esquimalt festival people had to pay for admission and for food.

"I have been receiving phone calls from members of the school board, local teachers and professors at the University of Victoria, asking me to comment on the authenticity of the potlatch," she said.

"All I can say it is not authentic," she said. "I was upset when I saw the dances. They were not performed in the traditional manner."

She said she was among a group who met Poelzer to discuss the matter of using the name potlatch.

"He admitted not being Indian, but married to a Tsimshian from Kitimat, she said. "He said he has been living so long among us that he considered himself an Indian."

"Well, I have no quarrel with him about that," she said. "I don't care if a non-Indian organizes Indian dances, as long as they are done properly in the traditional manner."

VICKERS
. . . she got calls

Poelzer admitted meeting an Indian group but declined to name the individuals.

"But I wish those Kwakiutl Indians from Alert Bay would mind their own business," he said.

Wharf Homes For Oldsters

By PAT DUFOUR

Times Staff

A 65-unit apartment building for senior citizens is planned for the former Oakland Industries Ltd. site at 1302-1306 Wharf Street.

The project is being planned by developer Hans Hartwig, who purchased the ½-acre waterfront property near the Johnson Street bridge two weeks ago.

He says the apartments will be one-bedroom, each having a balcony, most of them facing onto the harobr.

They will be rental units, costing somewhere between $200 and $250 a month.

The plans, which are now before the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for approval, include an open-air plaza fronting on Wharf.

Because of the sloping terrain the non-combustible building will be five storeys on the harbor side and four storeys on the Wharf Street side.

The height of the building on Wharf will be a maximum of 40 feet, well within the zoning requirements for Inner Harbor development, Hartwig said.

An application has been made to demolish the buildings on the site, one of which is designated heritage.

The building however, is in a sorry state.

The fish cannery company vacated the Wharf Street premises Jan. 15, 1975 to move to its new Montreal Street complex. Mortar has dropped from the bricks and the interior has borne the brunt of fires and other acts of vandalism.

Hartwig said the heritage building, which encroaches on five feet of city sidewalk, has been declared unsafe by city inspectors.

Hartwig, whose other projects include Nootka Court and Hartwig Court, said it is essential that living accommodation be increased in the downtown core of the city.

"We are faced with a lack of parking. There must be more residential in the downtown area that will not need parking," he said. "The whole Market Square, as an example, will be a failure unless there is some redevelopment."

Providing he gets CMHC and city approval, Hartwig expects work to get under way in about six weeks with the project due to be completed some time next spring.

Sewer Trouble 'Real Hazard'

Faulty sewage disposal systems in some houses near Esquimalt Lagoon are continuing to produce a health hazard which is "very real," the regional health officer said Friday.

Dr. Allan Arneil said he would like to start work right away on about 20 of the worst systems. Tests have recently shown far more viruses than previously suspected. In some homes, effluent is running over driveway and onto the roads.

Homes in the subdivision, which was developed by Block Bros., use chromoglass disposal systems, which involve agitating effluent and pumping it into dispersal fields.

Correcting the individual faulty systems might prove simply a short-term soltuion so Arneil is recommending a sewage collection system to serve the 68 houses.

If 50 percent of residents sign a petition requesting it, the regional board can install a collection system, possibly getting a start by August.

Isherwood Denies Business Link With Golf Plan

Joe Isherwood, part owner of the Royal Oak Inn, disclaimed Friday any financial interest in a proposal to lease 153 acres of Beaver Lake parkland to make an 18-hole golf course.

The proposal was made by Vancouver golf architect Ernest E. Brown to the parks committee of the Capital Region board Wednesday.

Isherwood in June of 1974 is quoted as saying his company planned a nine-hole golf course, as large or perhaps larger than Ardmore, as well as three covered tennis courts.

Isherwood said the company's plan for a golf course is not connected or associated with the new proposal.

"We were planning to build the golf course on our own lands," he explained. "But we have now waived aside this project in view of this new proposal."

He added he is completely in favor of using Beaver Lake parkland for the development of a golf course.

"The regional district has done nothing with the land," he said. "It's a disgrace."

Isherwood, however, expressed doubts a golf course would pay if the land was leased to a private company.

"It seems to me it would be more likely to pay if it was a public golf course," he said.
